No way out for Meralco: SC says ruling final

By Michael Lim Ubac and Ronnel W. Domingo

MANILA Electric Co. has no other option but to immediately repay the excess charges it imposed on its consumers, despite filing a motion last week asking the Supreme Court to rule on its third decision compelling the utility firm to return the excess collections.

Thus said Supreme Court spokesperson Ismael Khan, who declared yesterday that the high court ruling on the refund, estimated to be at least P28 billion, was final and executory.

"In the case of Meralco, the decision is supposed to be final. The very wording of the decision itself would suggest that any second motion for reconsideration is a prohibited pleading," said Khan, also the high tribunal's deputy administrator.

Second suspected SARS death reported

DAGUPAN CITY—Health officials have formed a task force to isolate three zones in Alcala, Pangasinan, where nursing aide Adela Catalan stayed for several days before succumbing to probable SARS on April 14.

Catalan's 74-year-old father Mauricio died yesterday of colon cancer but is considered a suspected SARS case because he developed fever and had to be hospitalized after contact with his daughter, Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit said.

Mauricio's ailment, diagnosed only last month, was the reason his 46-year-old daughter flew home from Canada on April 5 and made trips to medical clinics in Pangasinan, Baguio, Tarlac and Metro Manila in search of a doctor to treat him.

A sample of Mauricio's blood will be sent to a Japanese laboratory, which is already examining blood from his daughter and a 64-year-old German man who fell ill with probable SARS but recovered, Dayrit said. The tests will confirm whether the three were infected with the virus.

Pangasinan health officer Nemesia Mejia said Task Force Star was formed to monitor the movements of residents of the BEIJING—Three Asian countries yesterday reported 17 more SARS deaths as medical experts on the Chinese mainland fanned out to the vast countryside to contain the epidemic and schoolchildren in Hong Kong went back to class wearing surgical masks after a three-week shutdown.

China—epicenter of the flu-like virus that has killed 235 people and infected 4,100 in at least 30 countries—reported 11 new fatalities and Hong Kong five, Malaysia announced its second death from Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome.

The WHO representative in China, Henk Bekeedam, told Reuters that it would be "quite a challenge to contain SARS" in China. "I think we're going for a very big outbreak," Bekeedam said.

According to China's health ministry, the death toll on the mainland has reached 97 while the total number of infections surged to 2,158—nearly a quarter of whom are health care workers. The number of suspected cases

RITM to be reserved for SARS cases

THE ENTIRE Research Institute for Tropical Medicine (RITM) in Alabang will soon be reserved for patients suspected of having Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS), RITM director Remigio Olveda said yesterday.

The RITM, which, along with the San Lazaro Hospital in Manila, was recently declared a "reference center for SARS patients," is now being readied to cater mainly to SARS cases.

"We are reserving 35 beds for SARS patients in a worst-case scenario ... when local transmission [of the disease] shall have set in," Olveda said yesterday.

Erap wants Pimentel as witness

By Volt Contreras and Michael Lim Ubac

DEPOSED President Joseph Estrada's legal strategy for his plunder trial is beginning to take shape, and it starts by summoning a former Senate President.

Estrada wants Sen. Aquilino Pimentel Jr.—the 10th senator to vote for the opening of the second Jose Velarde envelope—to be a witness for the defense.

Estrada said Pimentel could testify that when the infamous envelope was finally opened on Feb. 14, 2001 by virtue of Senate Resolution No. 927, it yielded papers showing Estrada's businessman pal Jaime Dichaves as the

Explosions mar GMA visit to Pikit; iron hand policy stays

DAVAO CITY—Velvet glove and iron hand. In the past two days in Mindanao, the President comforted victims of the Bulok fighting while continuing to talk tough against "lawless elements."

Yesterday afternoon, President Macapagal-Arroyo led thousands of displaced families back to their homes in Pikit, North Cotabato, from which they had fled when intense fighting erupted between the Armed Forces and MILF rebels last February.

Presidential Assistant for Mindanao Jesus Dureza said Ms Macapagal also conducted a dialogue with residents of barangays Bago Inged, Rajah Muda, Gli-gli and Inug-ug, to determine their needs.

The previous night, however, the President turned down the appeal of Davao businessmen for her to lift General Order 3, which had placed Southern and Central Mindanao under a state of lawless violence.

The businessmen said the order was hurting the economy, but Ms Macapagal said there was a need for the military and the police to step up efforts "to prevent and suppress acts of terrorism and lawless violence" in the two regions.

Citing her "inherent constitutional right as President and Commander in Chief," Ms Macapagal read the April 3 order before key government officials and business leaders at the Marco Polo Hotel here.

CALAPAN CITY—Two officials of a human rights group and a militant farmers' organization investigating the murders of farmers, community leaders and activists in Oriental Mindoro have themselves been murdered.

Their bodies were found yesterday in Bansud town a day after masked men claiming to be anti-communist vigilantes seized them in Naujan town.

The victims were identified as Eden Marcellana, secretary general of the Alyansa sa Pagusulong ng Karapatang Pantao in Southern Tagalog (Karapatan-ST), and Eddie Gumanoy, chair of the Kasapihan ng mga Samahang Magbubukid sa Timog Karaglukan (Kasama-TK).

Residents found the bodies at about 7 a.m. in Barangay Alcadema in a bamboo grove some 200 meters from the highway, according to a report from the Bansud police.

Also abducted were Francisco Saez and Melvin Jocson, provin-

Proponents push Cha-cha P1-B 'DIRTY MONEY'

IGNORING the criticisms, proponents for Charter change have gone ahead with the campaign, creating yesterday three "working committees" to draft the proposed amendments.

A statement released at the House of Representatives said leaders of the Coalition for Charter Change Now! met yesterday at the Club Filipino to form the committees that would also draft the "rules for the constituent assembly."

Western Samar

Rep. Eduardo Nachura, the chair of the House committee on constitutional amendments who participated in the meeting, said the committees will be working on political and economic reforms and the rules for the constituent assembly.

The draft proposals will be submitted to the Senate and the House "in case" the Senate concurs with a House-approved resolution to convene Congress into a constituent assembly to carry out the amendments. Juliet Labog-Javellana

SC extends freeze on suspicious funds

By Michael Lim Ubac

THE SUPREME Court yesterday ordered the freezing of some P1.08 billion in deposits of suspected Abu Sayyaf leaders and pseudo-investment firms in 138 banks all over the country.

The temporary restraining order effectively extended the separate freeze orders earlier issued by the Anti-Money Laundering Council (AMLC) against those suspected of laundering money.

The TRO, dated April 21, was released yesterday by the tribunal which is holding its summer session in Baguio City and is to take effect immediately.

The freeze orders cover all existing bank accounts of the ASG, Rosario Baladajay's MMG International and Multitel Corp., Tibayan Management Group, Genta Ogami's transactions and the bank accounts involved in the LandBank tax scam.

It also covered 16 freeze orders earlier issued by the AMLC "and all other similar cases pending before all courts in the Philippines."

The high court was referring to 29 similar petitions for extension of effectivity of about 100 other freeze orders pending before the Court of Appeals. The earlier freeze orders expired yesterday.

With the SC order, the estimated P1.08 billion in frozen bank accounts cannot be withdrawn by their owners for an indefinite period.

The Office of the Solicitor General sought the TRO on April 3, 2003 after the CA, which has the authority to issue the freeze order under the new Anti-Money Laundering Law (RA 9194), failed to act on the case.

The OSG contended that unless continuously frozen, the bank accounts "will certainly be placed beyond the reach of the law enforcement authorities."

"If the existing orders are not extended on or before April 22, they will automatically be lifted by operation of law," Solicitor General Alfredo Benipayo said.

This would have rendered ineffectual government efforts to go after big-time money launderers.

Benipayo warned that if the funds and bank deposits under investigation by the AMLC were to disappear, the government would have a hard time prosecuting suspected money launderers.

Before the OSG elevated the matter to the SC, Benipayo had asked the CA to determine probable cause that the frozen accounts were "dirty money."

This is a requirement under the amended law before any suspicious account can be frozen.

The law was amended on March 7 after the Financial Action Task Force international anti-money laundering watchdog threatened to impose financial sanctions on the Philippines if it failed to come up with a stronger law by March 15.

It's still go for absentee vote—Comelec

AFTER ranting about the impossibility of absentee voting, given a limited budget, the Commission on Elections finally bent over for lawmakers and resumed preparations for the implementation of the law.

Comelec chair Benjamin Abalos Sr. said the overseas polls would go on as mandated by the Absentee Voting Act despite a budget of only P400 million this year.

The Comelec earlier called off the scheduled May 5 overseas registration and reset it to June 5, citing lack of time and funds.

Abalos made the turnaround after a meeting on Monday night with Senators Franklin Drilon, Manuel Villar and Edgardo Angara, Foreign Affairs Secretary Blas Ople, and Budget Secretary Emilia Boncodin.

The Comelec chief said Boncodin had allowed the poll body to acquire expenses based on loans that the government would guarantee, but only if the cost of implementation—including regional training, purchase of equipment and other registration paraphernalia—exceeded P400 million.

"This seems to be the only way for us to proceed because the lawmakers cannot insert more funds into the GAA," Abalos said.

The President is set to sign the General Appropriations Act (GAA) today.

Abalos said the Comelec would probably conduct counting and canvassing of votes manually in countries where there are few Filipino voters. Counting machines would be installed only wherever there is a huge number of registrants.

The Comelec initially sought at least P800 million this year to prepare for the overseas polls.

Last month Abalos recommended the postponement, and later the selective application, of the absentee voting law, following Congress' allocation of just P400 million in the

Helps prevent Heart Attack!

Aspirin has been proven to help prevent heart attack. It helps reduce the number of "bad prostaglandins" in the blood. "Bad prostaglandins" are the reason why blood clots occur. These blood clots could help trigger a heart attack.

Less "side effects"

There are people who experience "side effects" like ulcer when taking aspirin. COR-30 is the "lowest dose" aspirin. Because of this, you can experience less or even no aspirin induced "side effects". However, being "low dose" does not necessarily mean "low efficacy". This does not diminish its ability to lessen "bad prostaglandins" in the blood and help protect you against heart attack.

COR-30 is made specially for the heart!

Heart ailments are expensive to treat! You are not the only one who will suffer but also your whole family. Help prevent it from happening by taking COR-30 everyday. Senate votes higher pay for judges

By Michael Lim Ubac

HERE'S good news for members of the judiciary—the Senate passed on Monday a bill exempting them from the Salary Standardization Law.

This means members of the judicial branch of government from Chief Justice Hilario Davide Jr. on down through the ranks would receive sharp increases in their salaries and allowances, once the bill is enacted into law.

Supreme Court and other justice officials hailed yesterday the passage of Senate Bill No. 2018.

SC Court Administrator Presbitero Velasco said the bill would entice more lawyers to join the judiciary.

"It's a welcome development," said Deputy Court Administrator Ismael Khan, SC spokesperson.

Khan said he had yet to read the bill, but "any improvement of compensation for judges will certainly redound to more applications from the private sector."

He said one reason for the high vacancy rate in the judiciary—44 percent in the first-level courts and over 20 percent in the regional trial courts throughout the country—was the low compensation.

The Senate unanimously approved SB 2018 on third reading. The bill would increase by 100 percent the basic pay of court officials.

All 17 senators present on Monday approved the bill, as well as Senate Bill No. 2526, which authorizes the Commission on Elections to automate the counting of votes in the 2004 elections.

The two bills are to be transmitted to the bicameral conference committee where they will be reconciled with the House of Representatives' versions of the bills.

Sen. Francis Pangilinan, principal author of SB 2018, said, "We expect to pass this bill in the bicam before June. The President has certified it as urgent as it is one of her key measures."

Korean war vets mark 52nd year of Battle of Yultong

FILIPINO veterans of the Korean War mark the 52nd anniversary today of the historic Battle of Yultong, which made heroes out of the Philippine Army's 10th Battalion Combat Team (BCT).

Veterans from the 10th, 20th, 19th, 14th and 2nd BCTs, which constituted the Philippine Expeditionary Force to Korea (Pefok), will gather at the Libingan ng mga Bayani's Korean War Pylon for the simple rites and the turnover of a commemorative exhibit.

Over 7,000 officers and men from the Philippine Army served under Pefok and won praise from their allies in the United Nations Command for their courage and fighting skills.

The Battle of Yultong in North Korea was fought by the 10th BCT under Col. Dionisio Ojeda, whose 900 officers and men successfully defended their positions against the Chinese People's Volunteers' 12th Army, which consisted of 40,000 soldiers at full strength. The 10th BCT lost some 50 men, while Chinese casualties were estimated in the thousands.

Thus the 10th BCT came to be known as "The Fighting Filipinos."

Guests of honor at the anniversary rites are AFP Vice Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Rodolfo Garcia and South Korean Ambassador Son Sang-Ha.

A collection of rare photographs recounting Pefok's role in the Korean war, the exhibit will be turned over to the Philippine Army by Brig. Gen. Bienvenido Castro (Ret), president of the Pefok Veterans Association, Inc. The collection will be housed at the Philippine Army museum.

During the Battle of Yultong and for most of its Korean tour of duty, the 10th BCT was attached to the United States 3rd Infantry Division (Rock of the Marne). This division fought in World Wars 1 and 2 in Europe and, more recently, was the key combat unit in "Operation Iraqi Freedom."

Maj. Gen. Robert "Shorty" Soule, 3rd Infantry commanding officer in the Korean War, said the 10th BCT was the best Allied unit in his division.

Led by the US, 21 member countries of the UN sent combat troops or provided humanitarian aid to South Korea. Communist North Korea and the People's Republic of China opposed the UN forces during the three-year conflict that claimed the lives of more than one million soldiers and over three million civilians.

LPG prices cut

THREE oil companies—Caltex Phil., Petron and TotalFinaElf Phil.—yesterday announced they would be cutting the prices of their liquefied petroleum gas by P1 per kilogram starting at midnight last night.

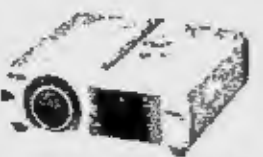

Industry officials said the price reduction would mean that an 11-kg cylinder of Petron's Gasul would now cost between P294 and P304 while TotalGaz would cost about P280. Caltex did not give figures.

This is the second time in a month that LPG prices have decreased, which followed a series of price hikes starting in August 2002 totaling P6.95 per kg.

Petron public affairs manager Virginia Ruivivar said in a statement the cut in domestic prices reflected changes in the international market.

Ruivivar said international contract prices of LPG went down in April by as much as $55, from $372.50 to about $217.50 per metric ton. Ronnel Domingo

Sulu won't be new US front vs terror—GMA

SULU will not be the "new battle-front" for the United States-led global war against terrorism, President Macapagal-Arroyo said yesterday.

US troops to be deployed in the Balikatan 03-1 joint military exercises in Sulu later this year will only be engaged in training their Philippine counterparts as well as carrying out civil projects, the President said in a statement.

"There is no sense in speculations that Sulu will be the new battlefield involving US troops," she said.

The US troops "will not land and shoot" in Sulu, said the President who stressed that the Americans are barred from participating in combat operations against the Abu Sayyaf by the military which had been given 90 days, from February, to crush the kidnap-for-ransom group.

"No such (American) soldiers will be offensively engaged at any time during the training exercise," Ms Macapagal stressed.

"They have come to share knowledge with our troops and civic projects with our communities," she said.

The President claimed that the Abu Sayyaf are "already on the run and our own troops are already winning the fight."

She also said the Balikatan 03-1 was "not a scenario being forced upon the people" of Sulu whose Muslim population is said to be deeply resentful of US soldiers because of atrocities by the US Army during the pacification campaign there at the turn of the 20th century.

"Military and local officials have been in close consultation for sometime now and have ironed out the issue with local residents," she said.

In Zamboanga City, Southern Command chief Lt. Gen. Roy Kiamko said majority of the people of Sulu supported the conduct of the Balikatan 03-1 in the province.

Only a handful of residents, including two mayors, oppose the war exercise involving US troops, Kiamko said.

"Out of 18 municipal mayors, only two are opposing, so majority supports Balikatan and majority is given more weight," he said.

The mayor of Jolo town, Suhod Tan, is among those opposing the exercises. He said the arrival of the Americans even if only for humanitarian purposes would spell trouble for the people of Jolo.

"We have had enough trouble. Look at what happened in 2000 when the AFP called for all-out offensives against the Abu Sayyaf? We are suffering from endless crises. Businesses have been affected. What if the Americans meet an accident? We are all tired of being in the stage of social services, we want to move on," Tan said in an interview.

The Concerned Citizens of Sulu, a group of lawyers, academics and religious, expressed their opposition to the deployment of US troops in a recent letter to the President.

They said said there were far more pressing issues for the people of Sulu than the presence of the Abu Sayyaf.

They and some local officials agreed that the bandit group was a recent problem while poverty has been haunting Joloanos for decades now. Carlito Pablo and Julie S. Alipala, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Solons split on RP role in post-war Iraq

LAWMAKERS are divided on the government's decision to send peacekeepers and humanitarian workers to help reconstruct and rehabilitate Iraq.

Negros Occidental Rep. Jose Apolinario Lozada, chair of the House committee on foreign relations, yesterday argued for the safety of the 500-member contingent—including 300 soldiers and policemen, military engineers, doctors, social workers, and diplomats—which is set to leave on May 15.

Lozada warned of a protracted guerrilla warfare in the ravaged country, saying Filipinos and other foreign nationals whose governments belonged to the "coalition of the willing" could be prime targets of Iraqi extremist groups.

The solon recalled the case of overseas Filipino workers in Jordan who were reportedly antagonized by the locals because of the Philippines' support of the United States-led war.

Sen. Manuel Villar Jr., chair of the Senate committee on foreign relations, said the government's decision should be reviewed, if only because the Iraqis had not asked for help.

Villar cited media reports on the Iraqi's keenness to run their own country. Obviously, he said, they resented the Americans' "intrusion and meddling."

Besides, he said, the money that would be spent on the mission could be used elsewhere—for instance, to improve public school facilities. He chided the government for acting before it could identify a source of funds for the volunteers.

In a press conference yesterday, Foreign Secretary Blas Ople said Manila would finance the mission for the first month, after which the US would foot the bill. He said the mission would stay in Iraq for six months to one year. Definitely, he added, there would be no combat role for the Philippine forces.

Six other congressmen yesterday said no matter what they thought of the US invasion of Iraq, they were backing up the Philippine mission.

The six were House defense committee chair Prospero Pichay, housing committee chair Prospero Nograles, accounts committee chair Robert "Ace" Barbers, natural resources committee chair Eduardo Veloso, Western Samar Rep. Reynaldo Uy, and Bulacan Rep. Willie Villarama.

In a joint statement, the solons said: "What are allowances and expenses compared to the 100,000 jobs that Foreign Affairs Sec. Blas Ople expects to be given to Filipino laborers? Also remember that in the $75-billion war budget proposed by (US) President Bush, $133 million are allocated as foreign aid to the Philippines." *Carla P. Jumping the gun on Iraq

WHILE other nations are still debating the administration of post-war Iraq, the Philippines has jumped the gun on the rest of the world with the appointment of an ambassador to the war-torn country, businessman Jose Ibazeta.

"It's one way of saying that as soon as the government (in Iraq) is formed, we would be extending recognition to it," said presidential spokesperson Ignacio Bunye yesterday.

"At the proper time, when there's an existing Iraqi government, then (Ibazeta's) appointment will be formalized," he added.

The United States has shown it intends to stay in Iraq for some time, with the appointment of retired general Jay Garner to oversee the ravaged nation's reconstruction.

'Midnight Madness'

IT LOOKS like it's going to be the "Midnight Madness" sale of the Macapagal administration. Seven pieces of government-owned property are being sold to raise funds to reduce the budget deficit. Most of the assets that will be put up for auction are prime real estate in New York, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago and Houston.

A parallel effort is reportedly being undertaken by the Privatization Council for government property in Japan. The sale of two pieces of government property in Tokyo and two others in Kobe is also being proposed. Finance Undersecretary Eric Recto said, however, that the outright sale of the four government assets in Japan was "out of the question." He recalled that the Supreme Court in 1990 ruled that the government had no right to dispose of the Roponggi property which was part of the public domain.

Has it come to this? Is the government so pressed for funds that it has to sell prime real estate in the United States and Japan whose value can be expected to increase over time? Can't the government find other ways to partly cover the budget deficit?

Among the assets to be sold is the Philippine Townhouse, a six-story building on East 66th Street in New York. A US firm has put its current fair market value at $17.5 million. Another is the Philippine Center on New York City's Fifth Avenue which has an estimated fair market value of between $22.7 million and $25 million. A third is the old chancery building at 1617 Massachusetts Avenue in Washington, D.C., said to be worth $2.98 million.

The others are: a 4,350-square-foot property in Houston, Texas, with an assessed value of $388,000; the Philippine Center buildings at 445-447 Sutter St. in San Francisco, with a fair market value of $13 million; a house at 945 Timber Hill Road in Highland Park, an hour's drive from Chicago, valued at $450,000; and a 4,800-square-foot lot at 620 Terry Ave. in Seattle with an assessed value of $240,000.

Why the hurry to sell these pieces of choice real estate located in prime areas of five major US cities? If they were maintained well, they could bring greater value for the government over the years.

It has been said that some of these assets are in a state of disrepair and it would cost the government a lot to repair and maintain them. But surely a way could be found to raise money for the government and at the same time have something for the repair and maintenance of these assets.

Recto, who oversees the disposition of government assets in the United States and Japan, has himself provided the answer. He said the property could be leased, be developed through a joint venture or be the sites of build-operate-transfer projects. Through these schemes the assets would remain the property of the Philippine government and at the same time earn money for it.

There is suspicion that this "Midnight Madness" sale is being conducted to raise funds for some people. Commissions are going to be paid when the pieces of property are sold. And when less pricey pieces of real estate are bought to replace them, again commissions are going to be paid to some people. We hope these suspicions are not true.

The assets in the United States should not be sold because most of them have become part of the national heritage. They have not just sentimental but historical value. For instance, the old chancery building on Massachusetts Avenue in Washington, D.C. has been witness to many developments in Philippine-American relations for more than four decades.

Who is the Filipino who has gone to New York and has not dropped in at the Philippine Center on posh Fifth Avenue? Or who has walked on the streets of San Francisco and not visited the Philippine Center on Sutter Street? These are old, familiar buildings to Filipino expatriates and tourists abroad.

Selling these assets is like disposing of highly prized family heirlooms. "Nakakahiya (It's a shame)," someone said. It's a sign of desperation, a sign that the government is scraping the bottom of the barrel to raise funds to reduce the deficit. Or is it just that?

No, these pieces of property should not be sold; other ways have to be explored to raise the needed funds. And aside from the modes presented by Recto, why doesn't the government try some tested ways, such as intensifying tax collection and adopting an austerity program?

Vote first, qualify later

AS I SEE IT

Neal H. Cruz

YOU are familiar with the "buy now, pay later" and the "fly now, pay later" plans. Now we have the "vote now, qualify later" plan which our Congress has included in the Absentee Voting Law.

In one of the provisions of that law, a Filipino immigrant or permanent resident of another country can vote in Philippine elections by merely executing an affidavit promising to resume residency in the Philippines within three years after voting. This is supposed to cure his disqualification from voting under Section 1, Article V of the Constitution which provides that a voter should "have resided in the Philippines for at least one year and in the place where he proposes to vote for at least six months immediately preceding the elections."

In other words, the Filipino residing in another country will be allowed to vote first before he is qualified. He qualifies himself by returning to the Philippines and taking residency here within three years after approval of his application for registration. Is this constitutional or not?

It is not, argued three election lawyers in a memorandum filed with the Supreme Court to support their petition assailing certain provisions of the Absentee Voting Law.

"The affidavit promising to resume residency in the Philippines within three years is a clear admission that the potential absentee voter is not a resident of the Philippines, hence he does not possess the qualification of a voter as required under the said provision of the Constitution," argued lawyers Romulo B. Makalintal, Pete Q. Quadra and Sixto S. Brillantes Jr.

Congress was authorized by the Constitution to pass a law to provide a system for absentee voting by "qualified Filipinos abroad." Under the Absentee Voting Law that it passed however, "What Congress did was to provide a system to allow the apparently disqualified Filipino immigrants or permanent residents of another country to vote, thereby violating or exceeding the authority granted to it by the Constitution," said Makalintal, Quadra and Brillantes. In other words, what Congress did was to pass a law providing a system for absentee voting by disqualified Filipinos abroad.

Citing several cases already decided by the Supreme Court, the three lawyers said that when a Filipino acquires "immigrant or permanent resident status in another country, he is deemed to have abandoned his domicile and residence in the Philippines. If he wants to reacquire his Philippine residency, he has to reacquire it for the length of time prescribed by the law and, for such purpose, he needs not only intention to do so, but his personal presence in the said place. Hence a mere affidavit promising to return within three years will certainly not result to reacquisition of one's residence."

If the residency of these immigrants or permanent residents of another country shall be restored or recognized by the mere execution of said affidavit, then the Supreme Court "will be rewriting and abandoning decisional precedents on the meaning and interpretation of legal residence for voting and election purposes."

What the Constitution requires is that a voter must be qualified on the day of the election and not at some future time. It cannot be a "vote now, qualify later" proposition, the three lawyers said.

"What will happen to their votes," they asked, "if these immigrant or permanent residents are allowed to vote but do not return to the Philippines within three years as promised in their affidavits? Will they be invalidated? And, may I add, what will happen to the candidates for whom they voted and who have already been proclaimed winners and are already serving their terms of office? If the votes are invalidated and they end up with less than the required votes to win, will they be removed from their positions?"

For example, "If 100,000 of these immigrants or permanent residents voted and only 5,000 returned as they promised, what would happen to the votes of the 95,000 who did not return? If the difference between the winning and losing candidates for president or the number 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14 senators was only 25,000, the 95,000 votes of those who did not fulfill their promise to return would be very material as they could make or unmake the winner for the said positions."

And if these immigrants and permanent residents are allowed to vote, they would also be qualified to run for elective positions in Philippine elections considering that they have already acquired the residency qualification. "That would invite a grotesque political situation where our President, Vice President, senators and/or party-list representatives are permanent residents of other countries," the three lawyers said.

They added that the "assailed provisions of the AVL will also violate the equal protection clause of the Constitution since these immigrants or permanent residents will only execute the said affidavit promising to resume residency in the Philippines within three years. However, this privilege is not extended to Filipinos actually residing in the Philippines but disqualified from voting for lack of the required period of residency as required by law."

On the argument that these immigrants or permanent residents were only forced by economic reasons to reside in another country, the three lawyers cited the Supreme Court decision in Caasi vs Court of Appeals.

"Unlike the great majority of our citizens who cast their lot with our country without mental reservations or purpose of evasion," the tribunal said, "these resident aliens of a foreign country are incapable of such entire devotion to the interest and welfare of their homeland for with one eye on their public duties here, they must keep another eye on their public duties under the laws of the foreign country of their choice in order to preserve their status as permanent residents thereof."

Means and ends

Conrado de Quiros

SHORTLY before war erupted in Iraq last month, many newspapers and TV stations carried editorials that lamented the plight of graduates. It was graduation time then for most schools, though others like UP were just about to have theirs this month.

Much of it was the usual thing we hear every graduation time. Well may the graduates strut and fret their hour upon the stage for tomorrow they have more than a hangover to wake up to. They have the specter of joblessness to face up to. Most of the editorials cited the extent of joblessness today, made worse over the years by the advent of truly bad times.

The expressions of anxiety are not unreasonable, and I suspect many of the parents of the graduates themselves harbor them. Particularly the not so well-off, even if they do not always say it openly. Would the sacrifices have been worth it? Would the sale of the carabao, the small piece of lot, the family heirloom have been worth it? Would the scrimping and saving and foregoing of amenities have been worth it? It is not an easy thought to have, as I know very well, having come from worse circumstances, and knowing friends who continue to be trapped in them.

It is not unreasonable, but I wonder also from another perspective if it is not a narrow-minded view of things. For what it is saying basically is that the purpose of education is to enable people to find jobs. If they are not able to do so, through lack of talent or opportunity, saying the education. It will have gone for naught.

The only comparable idea I've heard in recent months, also seemingly commonsensical, is that we should emphasize English more than any other language in this country because English is our ticket to finding jobs, preferably in big companies or abroad, and luring in foreign investors. Well, maybe English should be emphasized in this country, or restored as the medium of instruction—I leave others to debate the point—but I don't see why that should be so simply because it enables us to find work abroad and lure in investors and tourists. The purpose of language is to communicate, not find work. The purpose of language is to enable the government to talk to its people and us to talk to each other, not lure in investors or tourists.

It's the same thing with education. Of course education gives an edge in finding work, but that is not its real purpose. The real purpose of education is to educate. The real purpose of education is to help make a human being full, to spur him to reach for things beyond his grasp. Finding work or riches is its byproduct, not its reason for being.

In a deeper sense, what we're basically saying when we suggest that the purpose of education is to find work is that we live to work rather than we work to live. That is as monumental a confusion about means and ends as you can get.

That confusion is more pervasive than we think. It is patent in the way we conceive of "development," though what is patent is often the least visible to the naked eye. Our concept of development is that farmers and workers, who are the majority of the people of this country, should live miserable lives to ensure growth, not that growth should ensure better lives for farmers and workers. Of course the latter is implied, but the silence over it soon leads to its being forgotten. Look at the utterances of government officials in this respect and see if growth has not become the end rather than the means. And see if people have not become the means rather than the end.

It's a silly view of life, which however has now taken on the aspect of a truism. The opposite in fact is true. People are the end, the economy is the means. Education is the end, making a living is the means. Education is not wasted whether people find jobs or not. It is the end in itself, the flowering of life.

Education has its pragmatic or utilitarian value too, but so in ways that go beyond the notion of "have AB (or BS), will work." Education is practical too in that it helps us see things in a new light, change the terms of an equation, or ask entirely different questions—three ways of saying the same thing. In this respect, I've always found that joke about the difference between a Chinoy and Pinoy graduate a most illuminating one. A Pinoy graduate, the joke goes, will ask another Pinoy graduate: "What job have you found?" A Chinoy graduate will ask another Chinoy graduate: "What business have you formed? It is in fact no joke at all, it is a thoughtful observation about life in these parts.

Doubtless, many will say that is just a function of having capital, or being born into a family with one. Well, it is that too. But it is more than that: It is a different attitude toward life, it is a different perspective on life. I will not theorize on its origins. I will just say here that I've always thought education could do the same trick. You have education, you can think of possibilities that go beyond those your society has thrust on you. You have education, you can glimpse worlds beyond those your parents and their parents before them laid out for you. You have education, you need not dream of serving others, you can dream of conquering worlds.

You have education, you have imagination, you have moral judgment, you have the ability to distinguish means and ends. At the very least, you won't strike the pose of a vulture, waiting to pounce on the carcasses of the dead, which our government would have us do in Iraq, a thoroughly shameful thing to do. Which also suggests that not all those who go through school and earn letters after their names, which many of today's leaders have, get to be educated at all.

But that is yet another story, or column.

Toting up the losses

AN EARLY assessment of who lost in the Iraqi war draws in sharp relief at least three losers—the brutal dictatorship of Saddam Hussein; the transatlantic alliance which was deeply split over the US decision to invade Iraq without UN authorization; and the Iraqi National Museum in Baghdad, whose priceless artifacts on the cradle of ancient civilization in Mesopotamia were looted during the collapse of Baghdad.

The political aspects of the crumbling of the regime of Saddam are yet to be fully assessed, and it will take a long time to tell whether regime change in Baghdad will lead to the establishment of a modern democracy in Iraq.

If we are to learn from the consequences of the early 20th century American imperialism that saw the conquest of the Philippines at the turn of the last century and the planting of American-style democracy in these islands, we are not encouraged to be optimistic about the new American transformation experiment in the Middle East whose culture and religion are more difficult to deal with than the Philippine culture overlaid by more than three centuries of Spanish colonialism which has a strong element of Christianity embedded in it.

Right off the bat, although very few lament the overthrow of Saddam, the biggest cultural loss to the world is the looting of Iraq's National Museum of Antiquity. War, of course, destroys buildings, and it can be said that in the American bombardment of Baghdad, they tried to be very precise. Indeed, the museum was spared the bombing, although many of the government ministries, command centers and military targets inside the capital were demolished. But the museum did not survive the fate of most public buildings which were invaded by mobs in a looting spree while American tanks and armor crashed into Baghdad.

Iraqi, Unesco and international museum authorities had called the attention of the American military to the danger of looting, ahead of the offensive on Baghdad, but apparently this notice came to naught. True, most of the looting was done by the Iraqis themselves, but it has now developed that the pillage was more systematic and planned than an anarchic mob action. The looters knew what galleries and vaults they pried open and whose treasures they carted away.

Iraqi museum officials are sad and angry that the US military did very little to stop the looting at the museum, in the midst of the pillage of public buildings, hospitals, schools and business establishments. US Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld dismissed charges that the US forces had allowed widespread looting of Iraqi cities, saying that chaos was an inevitable part of the destruction of Saddam's regime. "We didn't allow it. It happened," he said. "And that's what happens when you go from a dictatorship with repressed order, a police state, to something that's different. There's a transition period and no one is in control."

Rumsfeld angrily blamed the media for "exaggerating" the looting and made the outrageous statement while TV footage showed wholesale looting taking place in the cities and while people pulled down statues of the reviled and hated dictator.

But Rumsfeld hit the peak of political insensitivity when he said that "free people" had a right to commit crime after they had been "liberated"—a statement that takes the same rank of cynicism with the American doctrine of "preemptive strike" and unilateral action, barely disguised as a collective action by the so-called "coalition of the willing," of which the Philippines is a token member.

So scandalous was the looting of the Baghdad museum that three members of the US committee on natural artifacts resigned, accusing the US military of failing to stop the looting. The Baghdad National Museum of Antiquities is one of the most important repositories of cultural treasures of antiquity in the Middle East. It houses artifacts of Sumerian, Babylonian and Assyrian civilizations on the Mesopotamian valley, bracketed by the Tigris and Euphrates rivers.

It records the civilizations on the Mesopotamian plain for more than 7,000 years. Mesopotamia is the site of modern Iraq carved out of the Ottoman Empire after World War I by Britain, whose mandate created the modern Iraqi state from the ruins of the Ottoman empire, superimposed on the layers of older civilizations.

Fearful lost are the tablets of the Code of Hammurabi—one of mankind's earliest codes of law famous for the stern injunction, "a tooth for a tooth, and a nail for a nail." The fact that the vaults were opened suggests employees of the museum may have been involved," one museum official said. "To the ordinary people, these are just stones. Only the educated know the value of these pieces."

Press reports say that at least 50,000 artifacts were carried out within 48 hours of looting, and it is feared they would find their way into the antique markets all over the world and wouldn't be recovered anymore.

No one is accusing the US troops of taking part in the looting but their failure to protect the museum from the pillage is revealing of American priorities in many wars their soldiers have fought.

Preservation of cultural treasures obviously takes low priority and in Iraq, protection of the oil fields—a strategic resource—from fire was a high priority. Troops seized most of the oil fields before the regime could put them to the torch.

In the battle for the liberation of Manila in 1945, a priceless cultural heritage—Intramuros—was obliterated, reduced to rubble and lost forever to the Filipino nation in relentless American shelling to flush out Japanese troops inside the Walled City and in vicious street to street and door to door fighting.

The message of control

ON VALENTINE'S Day three years ago, a Japanese customer summoned Rosita Canaman, a bar girl, to his hotel room for sex. As he told the police later, he became enraged when he caught her stealing from him. The customer then stabbed Rosita in the neck with a fork (!), strangled her and pushed her through a window on the 21st floor of the building.

The Japanese then called the escort service to request another companion for the evening, but the service called the police when he told them what happened to Rosita. It turned out that the customer had been accused of rape several times before, yet managed to avoid prosecution each time by paying a token amount to the victim's family.

Eric Ratliff, who tells this story, says Rosita's fate is an "ominous narrative" for many of the women he had worked with on his "ethnographic" research on women in the sex industry. "Since (the Japanese) was a regular customer at the bars in Manila where I conduct research," recounts Ratliff, "I discussed this event with some of the women who knew him personally. They described him as a 'sadist,' noting that his drug use caused him to 'go crazy' sometimes. However, this attack did not induce a general recognition of vulnerability among these women working in an occupation that is usually associated with a high incidence of sexual violence. Women working in the go-go bars—and indeed female friends throughout Philippine society have informed me that violence can occur anywhere at any time..."

"WITHIN two days of this savage murder," notes Ratliff, the Japanese was back in the go-go bars "seeking comfort in the company of friends who did not want to have anything to do with him anymore...Several women later told me that they ran and hid upstairs when he came into the bar, hoping to avoid him because they were afraid. His mere presence on the streets serves as a form of gendered terrorism because it reveals the extent of male power, able to get away with murder because the state does not care to prosecute violent offenders especially when the victim is labeled a 'prostitute,' and thus viewed as being responsible for her own demise."

"Sex-for-delivery libreng droga pa!" is how Abante Tonight headlined its story on Rosita, who was described as not just a prostitute but as a drug provider as well (a charge relatives deny). Regardless of the motives for thus labeling the victim, Ratliff says "her identification as a prostitute diminishes the severity of the crime, and indeed, her case faded from the headlines as a more 'serious' mauling of a cab driver caught the media's attention (he received a black eye in an altercation with several American servicemen)."

RATLIFF observes that in this country, social "controls" constrict the behavior of women while serving to "punish" those women who dare cross them. "Filipino women realize that they risk sexual violence simply by being in a public place—especially at night—because they are considered available for sex if they are not accompanied by a protective male figure." "Antiquated" vagrancy laws are often invoked by police to arrest women suspected of engaging in prostitution, though their suspicions are often triggered by nothing more substantial than a woman's having an unusual hair color, wearing heavy makeup or revealing clothing, or behaving in a boisterous manner.

In the last few years, the government has embarked on a day-care construction program, mainly in response to findings that most incidents of incestuous and child rape occurred inside the home between 10 a.m. and noon. Women's groups also argued that the feminization of migrant labor left children vulnerable to the abuse or neglect of fathers who are not prepared to raise a family alone. And yet, Ratliff points out, "despite the increasing recognition of home and family as a location of violence, the government insists in maintaining the current structure at all costs by denying couples the right to divorce, and providing few alternatives for women in abusive situations."

Ratliff cites the policy of making individual plaintiffs responsible for paying all legal fees as in effect "rendering justice inaccessible for most." Also, he points out, "local values dictate that confrontation should be avoided, so domestic conflicts and instances of sexual abuse rarely make it to the courts. In many cases, single women who have been raped are encouraged to marry their attackers to avoid scandal. Men who realize that this is a socially desired outcome of sexual violence have thus employed rape and kidnapping as an accepted form of courtship and expression of desire."

MANY of the women he interacted with uttered the cautionary statement that Ratliff uses as the title of his paper: "You have to be careful of uncles because they might rape you." "Uncle" in this case, says Ratliff, refers not just to a male blood relative but also includes "the many fictive kin that form the basis of intimate Filipino social relations." That the women recognized the threat posed by real or honorific "uncles" shows, says Ratliff, "how prevalent the idea of the predatory male is in this culture."

"Kinship" is supposed to preclude any sexual motivations or relations among the people involved, but Ratliff says "the status of these individuals in the local context should be analyzed to discern the nature of consent." In the local setting, both wives and prostitutes are seen as not having any right to refuse sexual relations. And fathers convicted of raping their daughters often justify their acts by citing their wives' refusal or inability to satisfy their sexual needs, needs which daughters must then fulfill.

An Easter egg game

GENERATION gap was so clear to me and my nieces last Easter Sunday as they were all excited about the Easter egg hunt. As I watched my sister paint and decorate two cartons of eggs on Good Friday I could not think of my nieces and their happiness as I knew we would have omelet for three weeks. Easter eggs and the Easter bunny were not part of my childhood and I felt like a dinosaur until I opened the drafts of Jose Rizal's third unfinished novel, a manuscript known by the chapter title "Makamisa" or "After Mass." In this work written in 1892, Rizal describes how a small town is dominated by a friar named Padre Agaton. More interesting than the story, however, are the vignettes in to what I think is rural life in a Southern Tagalog town in the late 19th century. Rizal describes a game played by boys and young men who have not reached adulthood called tuktukan.

I have never seen this game played except in a video documentary on Philippine games and rituals. Rizal leaves us with a less scandalous version of an egg-cracking game usually played by boys who tie eggs on strings around their waists, and with these hanging between their legs, attempt to crack the eggs of another player by swift pelvic thrusts that hit the opponent's egg hard enough to crack. First to crack, of course, is the loser. Perhaps there was no malice in the game but in this day of video and computer games, these physical games really look Jurassic. In Rizal's version of tuktukan the eggs are cracked in the hands of the combatants.

Tuktukan is just part of this unfinished novel by Rizal. People bet on the players, Silvino and Cecilio, as they would in a cockpit but then the game is only played, according to Rizal, during Lent and this scene happens during a procession. Silvino has a reputation for cheating yet the game continues and ends in a street brawl. Naturally, people are distracted from the procession. The brawl should be short and swift but then Captain Panchong, father of Cecilio, and Tanukang, father of Silvino, join the fray and the trouble gets bigger than it should. I translated the manuscript from the original Spanish and this is how it goes:

"On one side of the town one could see numerous groups of men, seated in front of the tiendas and food stalls run by the women, in heated discussion on the issues of the day. [On the other side] the young men carried chicken eggs and busied themselves with their favorite pastime called tuktukan, played only during Lent, while their fathers and elders were in the cockpit playing with their fortunes."

"Boys usually played tuktukan until they become adults. The only difference between this game and cockfighting was money. In cockfighting, one lost large sums but in tuktukan, the winner just took the cracked egg. [Before playing tuktukan, they first] carefully examined the eggs to determine whether one was more resistant than the other by testing them slightly against each other. Firmly holding the eggs, they gave each a slight stroke on the elongated portion of the egg. This slight blow on the lower part of the egg usually produced a tiny crack while the top remained intact."

"In the plaza, one could see Silvino, son of Tanukang, among the group of youngsters. He was well-dressed and carried a small pouch with half-a-dozen eggs that he had previously won, wrapped in a silk handkerchief. He was thus challenging everyone to an eggshell cracking contest."

"Tuktukan!" He shouted triumphantly. "Come on, are you afraid? Come on! I have already received several blows." The other young men, upon seeing his basket full of eggs, shied away and refused to join the contest. Silvino was notorious among the boys for being clever, arrogant and very demanding because his father was in power. Besides all this, everyone murmured that Silvino was a cheat, who filled his eggs with very fine brick or metal pellets.

"Tuktukan!" he shouted more arrogantly each time, and many responded by shaking their heads and keeping silent. Seeing that nobody would dare challenge him, he approached the son of Captain Panchong, who was also in the crowd and provoked him. "Let's go, the two of us." He said with a provocative air.

"Cecilio, the son of Captain Panchong, who was timid and bashful responded: 'I don't want to play with you. I'm not feeling well.'"

"Oh! Are you afraid?" Silvino sneered. "What? Me? Afraid of what?" Cecilio replied, somewhat irked. "Let us examine the eggs first. Oh, I guess you don't want to show your egg because it is filled with tiny brick pellets."

"Silvino was irritated by these comments. 'What brick pellets are you talking about? You're a coward! The truth is you're just afraid of your father, [that's why you don't want to play].'"

"Say that again? [the once timid Cecilio answered]. When was I ever afraid of my father?"

"Tuktukan!" Silvino shouted triumphantly and maliciously. "Tuktukan! Who would dare challenge me?" he repeatedly cried aloud.

"Still everyone refused to take the challenge, especially when somebody whispered that Silvino's winning egg might be a fake. In fact, young boys could devise many ways of faking an egg. Some would meticulously prick a small hole into the eggshell, then fill it up with tiny brick or metal pellets to reinforce the elongated part of the egg."

When a museum falls victim to war

FOR CONCERNED museum lovers around the world, the news came over the weekend of the catastrophe we all feared. One day after the American troops entered Baghdad, the National Museum of Iraq was looted and a reported 170,000 artifacts carted away, many of the major antiquities of the Mesopotamian civilization.

Thousands of men, women and children, brandishing guns, knives and clubs stormed into the national museum despite unheeded appeals by museum staff members to American troops in tanks just 500 yards away to stop the crowd. Most in the crowd were from the poor districts of the city but there were many too, who were middle class and darted into the 18 vaulted chambers of the museum, knowing where to go and what to steal.

Mohsen Hassan, a 56-year-old deputy curator of the museum, pleaded with American military commanders to protect the building but was given no help. Instead, Hassan, who spent 34 years developing the collection, could only watch helplessly as men with sledgehammers smashed glass display cases and fired guns to break the locks.

The loot included 4,000-year-old gold necklaces, jewelry and a gold harp from the Sumerian Dynasty. Hauled out too in wheelbarrows and carts were ancient stone carvings of kings and princesses, cuneiform tablets, tapestry, tablets on geometry, ceramics, urns and bowls dating 2,000 years back.

The refusal of the American forces to safeguard the national museum is a clear violation of the Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict. The convention specifically states that during conflicts, all parties must protect archives, libraries, monuments and sites and museums. International museum organizations had brought this matter up to both the American and British government months before the war began.

The destruction of the National Museum of Iraq painfully recalls the ravages of war inflicted on our own national museum. Mortar fire in World War II during the American "liberation" of Manila resulted in the loss of over 90 percent of the national museum's collection.

The world saw on television how the coalition forces took great pains to successfully secure the majority of Iraq's oil fields from any sabotage attempts by Saddam Hussein's Republican Forces. Yet, the coalition forces remained indifferent to the rampant destruction and accompanying looting of hospitals, government buildings for trade, agriculture and higher education, historical monuments and museums. With the much touted weapons of mass destruction still not found, the common perception that the American government waged war only to capture oil fields becomes increasingly plausible.

One outcome of war is the absence of order and civility. The military strategists in Washington, D.C. and London, obsessed with their own weapons of mass destruction, overlooked the anarchy and tragic aftermath of the war they spawned and should be taken to task for abandoning the police duties they must now bear. Unfortunately, for the National Museum of Iraq, there is nothing left to police. All its most valuable artifacts which trace the founding of three major world religions—Judaism, Christianity and Islam—in the region have vanished.

Many of the "unwilling" countries and its citizens opposed to the Iraq war cited the unnecessary civilian deaths that would result, and the destruction and looting of Iraq's museum treasures known to be the most extensive and valuable among all Middle Eastern museums. In addition, Iraq is dotted with thousands of historical monuments and archaeological sites often referred to in biblical passages.

In contrast, the "coalition of the willing" as exemplified by President Macapagal-Arroyo, has been boasting even before the fighting has stopped that there are thousands of jobs waiting for Filipinos in the reconstruction of Iraq. Snubbing the peace entreaties of her own spiritual leader, Pope John Paul II, and the majority of the Filipino people's staunch opposition to the war, President Macapagal unfortunately depicts herself not as a statesperson but as an amoral individual now angling for her piece of the action. The hundreds of maimed and dying Iraqi children in looted hospitals have not yet recovered or been placed in decent caskets and this President is already calculating her cheerleading reward. Will her Filipino humanitarian team be able to piece back torn children's limbs or the shards of bombed ceramics in sites such as Basra where the biblical Adam and Eve's Paradise was supposedly located? Will her team of social workers be able to heal a people whose national patrimony have now been ransacked?

It is all too terribly premature for the President to think that Filipinos will be welcomed with open arms and get plum jobs in the region. This tarnished country, one of the first founders of the United Nations, has plummeted to the status of an ambulance chaser, a derivative term for low-class lawyers who keep tabs of emergency patients for possible litigation fees. After the initial shock and eventual painful discovery that the region has irretrievably lost its artistic and historical treasures, we shouldn't be rudely disturbed if our workers become targets of fury in the Middle East.

Raid Abdul Rihar Muhammad, an archaeologist who has done extensive work in Iraq's 10,000 archaeological sites, said in an interview with the New York Times, "A country's identity, its value and civilization reside in its history. If a country's civilization is looted, as ours has been here, its history ends. Please tell this to President Bush. Please remind him that he promised to liberate the Iraqi people, but that this is not liberation, this is a humiliation."

For those of us who opposed this obscene war, we wish to state our profound sadness and lament for the many, now uncountable deaths of innocent Iraqi people. With the demise of the National Museum of Iraq, we now must mourn too the setback of civilization's progress as exemplified in the global yearning to preserve its heritage. In the cultural realm, there are no victors. Destruction, carnage and barbarism are the only victors.

Not feeding on Iraqi misery

WITH DEFERENCE, it was puritanical for the Catholic Bishops' Conference of the Philippines to consider it immoral for the country to prepare to send 100,000 Filipino workers to help in rebuilding Iraq. (PDI, 4/16/03) If that were to be the attitude of all democratic societies, how could a country known to depend on overseas workers even in peaceful times rise from the debris of war?

No, we are not feeding on the misery of the Iraqis! We are just getting real—as real as when a contractor quotes a price for the reconstruction of a house ravaged by fire, or when a priest collects funeral fees from the anguished survivor of a massacre. Indeed, there are legions of true-to-life situations where money must change hands without necessarily making the process immoral.

On the other hand, I decry the primacy given by the government to the sending of a peacekeeping force to Iraq over and above the country's clearly more urgent national priorities. For one, international protocols require that governments must officially relate with one another in the pursuit of their common objectives. Given that a post-Saddam government has yet to be established, our government's spontaneous reaction to help pacify the civil disorders in Iraq was too hasty and half-cocked.

More importantly, we have our own wars in Mindanao where peace has long been a stranger. True, nearly our entire armed forces are already there, relentlessly chasing terrorists into the hinterlands. Like the Iraqis, our brother Mindanaos have also lost their homes, their jobs, their relatives, their children's schools and perhaps their futures. Merely housing them in evacuation centers is not enough to heal their loss and their pain. Neither should they be relegated to looking after mere doles; they, after all, have normal lives to rebuild. But unlike the Iraqis, they do not have the United States, United Kingdom and Australia and the rest of the benevolent free world to help them. Mindanao needs more directly the kind of sympathy that we are giving to Iraq. I would have liked that the Philippine government would pour out its humanitarian urges in the right direction and in the right place, nearer home.

Soldiering on

THIS has reference to the column written by Raul J. Palabrica last March 16.

Allow me to thank him for his in-depth discussion of one of the most important yet often ignored issues: the pork barrel, also euphemistically called Priority Assistance Development Fund.

In his column, Palabrica correctly pointed out that Sen. Panfilo "Ping" Lacson could have trodden an unfamiliar territory when he stood before his peers and urged them to scrap the pork barrel from the national budget. No one before him had dared to make such a call concerning the matter, which every congressman or senator, apart maybe from Sen. Joker Arroyo, holds dearest to his heart.

For Lacson, one of the best ways to reward the people who trusted and elected him into office is to scrap the pork barrel because he is convinced that it is a major source of corruption aside from the fact that it will help reduce the ballooning budget deficit if the P200 million allotted to every legislator is deleted in the proposed national budget.

Like a lonely soldier fighting a lonely war, Lacson dared his colleagues to follow his lead but as Palabrica quaintly observed, he was ignored and was not even given the traditional parliamentary courtesy of being questioned on the points that he raised.

By doing and saying nothing, his colleagues sent a clear message to him "that the pork barrel has already grown so big, maybe even bigger than the Senate that discussing the same is tantamount to committing a cardinal sin."

However, we would like to assure the readers of Palabrica's column that Lacson will not be affected by the cold shoulder treatment he got from his peers, but this will inspire him all the more to stand on issues that he believes are right even if they are unpopular or will generate negative reactions from his fellow lawmakers.

It is also inspiring to know that there are still people like Palabrica who could see the wisdom behind the issues that certainly need to be addressed.

Also, with the support he is getting from ordinary people, Lacson will not be like a lonely soldier anymore fighting a lonely fight, because he derives great strength from the people who believe that he is on the right path.

A more apt title for RP mission to Iraq

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo's humanitarian mission to Iraq is actually a business and employment delegation.

It's impossible to hold back indignation regarding the Macapagal administration's plans to send a so-called humanitarian mission. Based on the latest reports, the mission is not really humanitarian in character. The administration is in truth sending a group of business prospectors and mercenary troops. The appointment of businessman Jose C. Ibezeta exposed the administration's true objectives for sending a mission to Iraq—to scout the territory for possible business and employment opportunities and to have the Macapagal administration further ingratiate itself with the US government.

Ibezeta's background as a businessman fits hand in glove with President Macapagal's goals for sending a mission to Iraq. Ibezeta is the chair of Atlas Mining and Development Corp. and a consultant to the chair of A. Soriano Corp. He is also a director of AB Capital Investment Corp., PET Plans and International Container Terminal Services Inc.

If it's to be a real humanitarian mission, then the President would be sending a doctor to lead it, or religious leaders. But since a businessman is heading it, then it's clearly a business campaign. Then there are also the insider reports that President Macapagal is set to issue an executive order mapping out her administration's strategy to take advantage of the economic opportunities in Iraq's post-war rehabilitation.

There is already talk circulating in various business circles and key government offices that the President wants coordination between government agencies and the private sector to make full use of government resources in clinching multimillion-dollar deals in engineering and construction work in Iraq. Clearly, the administration's first priority is to secure financial assistance and endorsements for qualified Filipino contractors to assist them in securing contracts for construction and engineering works and subcontracting arrangements with American transnationals such as Bechtel Corp., Haliburton and Fluor Daniel, which are expected to corner most business deals in post-war Iraq.

Meanwhile, aside from the businessmen, and a sprinkling of medical personnel, the bulk of the government's Humanitarian Assistance Task Force (HATF) is mostly composed of police and military officials, who will be joining the US, British and allied forces in trying to pacify Iraqi civil resistance. It's hard to see how this so-called mission will be providing humanitarian aid when its members are too busy either trying to bag business and employment deals, and conducting civilian pacification campaigns alongside the US, British and allied troops.

Strategic plan for Iraq opportunities needed

OUR country should be seizing the golden economic opportunities in post-war Iraq reconstruction. Business opportunities and construction boom resulting from the $100 million allotted for rebuilding Iraq should entice our government to devise strategies for economic gains.

Right now, such strategies have yet to be devised. Although certain organizations like the Federation of Filipino Chinese Chamber of Commerce and Industry (FCCCI), Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Philippine Trading Corp., including construction firms like DMCI Holdings Inc., and BEI Corp., have signified interest in working with government agencies, a strategic plan has yet to surface.

Our rising unemployment "due to the rash of business closures and dislocation of labor, and the increasing number of graduates yearly," should compel us to seize the golden moment by sending all needed workers that we could possibly send in Iraq. Exporting Philippine food products for Iraq oil would be another way of maximizing our possible economic share from Iraq rebuilding.

Saddam's 'Shiite Thug' in US custody

DOHA, Qatar—Muhammad Hamza al-Zubaydi, known as Saddam Hussein's "Shiite Thug" for his role in Iraq's bloody suppression of the Shiite Muslim uprising of 1991, was arrested Monday, the US Central Command said.

Bush administration officials have identified al-Zubaydi as one of nine Iraqis—including Saddam himself—sought for trial on charges of war crimes or crimes against humanity.

A nurse by training and former member of Iraq's ruling Revolutionary Command Council and regional commander of the central Euphrates district, al-Zubaydi was No. 18 on a list of the 55 most-wanted figures from the Saddam's regime. Iraqi opposition groups have accused him of the 1999 assassination of a top Shiite cleric.

"This is very significant—he is one of the most hated men in the former regime," said Haider Ahmad, a London-based spokesperson for the Iraqi National Congress, one of the numerous parties that, in exile, had opposed Saddam's government.

He was an associate of Saddam since the early 1960s and had been retired from a public role in the leadership for about two years.

Central Command gave no further details on his arrest. The Iraqi National Congress, the leading anti-Saddam organization, said its forces arrested al-Zubaydi in Hillah, about 100 km south of Baghdad, and turned him over to US forces.

Ahmad said local people tipped forces to where al-Zubaydi was hiding with his son, and that the two were caught together.

"He was hiding in an abandoned, derelict area, not a built-up area," he said.

With Monday's capture, eight of the 55 most wanted are now in custody, though none of them is from the very top of the list. A ninth figure, Ali Hassan al-Majid—a top adviser to Saddam and known as "Chemical Ali" for his use of poison gas against Iraq's Kurdish minority—is believed to have been killed in an airstrike in Basra.

Al-Zubaydi, a former prime minister and deputy prime minister, was one of the key figures in suppressing the uprising of Iraq's Shiite majority that followed Iraq's defeat in the 1991 Gulf War. Tens of thousands of people died.

Al-Zubaydi was considered one of the most brutal members of Saddam's regime and was listed in a US State Department report "Iraq: Crimes against Humanity, Leaders as Executioners." He was once featured in an Iraqi videotape brutalizing Shiite dissidents as a display of authority and encouragement to soldiers to be tough.

A Shiite himself, al-Zubaydi also presided over the destruction of the southern marshes in the 1990s, an action aimed against Shiite "Marsh Arabs" living there. AP

Iraqi pilgrims, freed of Saddam, throng Kerbala

KERBALA, Iraq—Countless thousands of Iraqi Shiite Muslims, oppressed under Saddam Hussein, thronged the holy city of Kerbala on Tuesday, free for the first time in decades to mark one of the most sacred moments of their year.

Traffic ground to a halt as the pilgrims, many with chests, heads and faces bloodied from self-flagellation, chanted in praise of Imam Hussein, a grandson of Islam's Prophet Mohammad and one of the first leaders of the Shiite Muslim community.

Shiite leaders say a million or more may flock to Kerbala, 110 km south of Baghdad, for the climax of the pilgrimage, Arbaan, the 40th day after the death of Hussein.

As the procession made its way past crates of live chicken and hillocks of tomatoes, the pilgrims' chest-thumping ritual thundered across the city, scaring off flocks of pigeons.

Men in flowing white robes crowded atop trucks or perched on rooftops above banners. One, in English, read: "The Imam Hussein Revolution was a scream in the face of the oppressors."

Fighting among Mohammad's followers that led to Hussein's death is at the root of the split between Shites and the Sunni Muslims, who are in the majority elsewhere in the Arab world.

Some waved black flags for mourning, others the green flag of Islam. Women enrobed in black sat quietly at the roadside, slowly beating their chests. Many had walked barefoot on hot and dusty roads to reach Kerbala.

Street hawkers labored through the roads, showing carts loaded down with crates of soft drinks as other men stood watching, chewing bread, smoking or thumbing worry beads.

Nearby was the pilgrims' goal—the gold-domed shrine of Imam Hussein which was surrounded by portraits of the Shiite leader held aloft by the faithful.

Such processions were banned under Saddam Hussein's secular government, which cracked down the Shites—a 60 percent majority in Iraq—and suppressed their religious practices.

The last major celebration of Arbaan, in 1977, ended with Saddam's forces massacring Shites on the roads to Kerbala. Reuters

Report: US keeps plan to bomb N. Korea plant

SYDNEY—The Pentagon has produced detailed plans to bomb North Korea's nuclear plant at Yongbyon if the Stalinist state goes ahead with reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel rods, an Australian report said Tuesday.

Citing "well-informed sources close to US thinking," The Australian newspaper said the plan also included a US strike against North Korean heavy artillery in the hills above the border with South Korea.

The artillery directly threatens Seoul as well as 17,000 US troops stationed south of the Demilitarized Zone.

The Pentagon hardliners said to be behind the plan reportedly believe the precision strikes envisaged in it would not lead to North Korea initiating a general war it would be certain to lose.

This is because Washington would inform Pyongyang that the bombing was not aimed at destroying the regime of Kim Jong-il, but merely at destroying its nuclear weapons capacity.

The Australian report coincides with reports from Washington of an alternative US plan which envisages the United States teaming up with China to press for the removal of North Korea's leadership.

The second plan, contained in a classified memo reportedly circulated by Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, argues that Washington's goal should be the collapse of Kim Jong-il's regime.

President George W. Bush's administration has repeatedly said it believed the standoff would be resolved through diplomacy.

The reports come as confusion prevails over statements issued by Pyongyang last week about whether it has begun reprocessing 8,000 spent fuel rods or merely completed preparations to do so.

Western analysts, including those in Washington and in South Korea believe North Korea's initial announcement was a mis-translation and doubt there had been any such reprocessing.

Australian Foreign Minister Alexander Downer said Tuesday that Canberra also believed Pyongyang's statement claiming it had begun reprocessing the fuel rods had been mistranslated.

Reprocessing the 8,000 fuel rods, which would yield enough plutonium for six nuclear warheads within six months, would be the most provocative step taken by North Korea since the nuclear crisis erupted six months ago.

Downer told ABC radio on Tuesday that the Pentagon undoubtedly had "contingency plans for all sorts of things they could do in North Korea, militarily."

"That's the military's job, to draw up contingency plans, but the American administration strategy, as the President explained to me three weeks ago, is to ensure that there is a successful diplomatic solution here," he added.

"We are just on the threshold of entering into the first round of talks. I don't know how they will go, but in any case we are starting to make a little bit of progress on the diplomatic front and there isn't about to be a bombing campaign."

North Korea, the United States and China are set to sit down in Beijing this week for the first direct high-level talks since the nuclear standoff erupted in October. The talks will open Wednesday and are scheduled to run until Friday. AFP

Suharto half-brother imprisoned for fraud

JAKARTA—A court on Tuesday convicted the half brother of Indonesia's ousted dictator Suharto on embezzlement and fraud charges. It sentenced him to four years in prison.

Prosecutors accused Probosutedjo of taking the equivalent of $11.2 million from a state reforestation fund between 1994 to 1997. They say he obtained the money by falsely overstating the size of his timber estate on Borneo island and the number of new trees he had planted.

"The defendant Probosutedjo has been found guilty of committing a crime of corruption," said chief judge Muhamad Saleh. "Therefore, the defendant is sentenced to four years in jail."

The court's verdict included an order for Probosutedjo to repay the amount of the embezzled funds to the state.

Probosutedjo, 72, remains at liberty pending an appeal, which could take months.

He is the second member of Suharto's family to be convicted on criminal charges since the former authoritarian leader was forced to step down amid pro-democracy protests and riots in 1998.

Suharto's son Tommy is serving a 15-year prison term for ordering the murder of a Supreme Court in 2000.

Suharto himself, now 82, has evaded prosecution for alleged massive corruption during his 32-year rule. Doctors have said he is too ill and old to face trial.

During the dictatorship, Suharto's family and business associates accumulated huge personal fortunes through corrupt deals with the state as well as foreign and domestic investors. AP

2 Bangladesh ferries sink; 100 dead

DHAKA, Bangladesh—Rescue workers have recovered 100 bodies after two ferry boats capsized during tropical storms in different parts of Bangladesh, and the death toll was expected to rise, authorities said Tuesday.

Ninety-five bodies, including those of women and children, were recovered after a double-deck ferry, MV Mitali, went down Monday in the Buriganga River near the Bangladesh capital Dhaka, the Shipping Ministry said.

More than 200 people were still missing from that ferry, and many of them were feared dead. Rescue workers were using huge cranes to lift the sunken boat, where many bodies were believed to be trapped.

Survivors said dark clouds enveloped the river when the storm hit at 6 p.m. on Monday.

Hasina Begum, a school teacher, wept in front of the body of her 2-year-old daughter, Mithila, who died in the accident.

"I could not save my daughter. I've no right to live," said Begum, who was returning to her home in southern Bangladesh after attending a conference in Dhaka. "My little daughter wanted to see Dhaka city."

Bangladesh media reports said the ferry was carrying up to 400 passengers and only a few managed to swim ashore. AP

US warns of new global terror threats due to Iraq war

WASHINGTON—The United States said Monday it feared the military defeat of Saddam Hussein's regime had increased the potential for terrorist attacks on US interests overseas and urged Americans around the world to redouble their security precautions.

"Tensions remaining from the recent events in Iraq may increase the potential threat to US citizens and interests abroad, including by terrorist groups," the State Department said in a statement.

"The US government remains deeply concerned about the security of US citizens overseas," it said in a "worldwide caution" that renewed an existing warning issued on March 19 just hours after the Iraq war began.

"US citizens are encouraged to maintain a high level of vigilance and to take appropriate steps to increase their security awareness," it said.

The threats noted in the statement were suicide operations, kidnappings and bombings including attacks that might use non-conventional weapons such as chemical or biological agents.

It also stressed that terrorists and other extremist groups were now likely to target civilian facilities including residential neighborhoods, private clubs, restaurants, places of worship, schools, hotels, outdoor recreation events, resorts and beaches.

"If such facilities cannot be avoided, US citizens should increase their security awareness at such locations," the department said.

Unusually, the global warning, which is not set to expire until September, comes amid signs that the threat against US and western interests may be lessening in some places.

Last week, the State Department said it would allow diplomats who had been ordered to leave Pakistan and Israel over war-related terrorism fears to return to the country.

Those decisions, which kept in place general warnings against US citizens traveling to the two countries, were announced Thursday, a day after the Department of Homeland Security lowered the domestic terrorist attack alert in the United States from "high" to "elevated."

The domestic alert—introduced after the Sept. 11 attacks on New York and Washington in 2001 blamed on Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida network—had been raised to its second-highest level on March 17, just before the start of the Iraq war. AFP

Jazz-soul singer Nina Simone, 70

LOS ANGELES/PARIS—Jazz and soul icon Nina Simone, whose smoky tones gave voice to the American civil rights movement and ranged from gospel to George Gershwin, died on Monday at her home in the south of France, her manager said.

She was 70 years old. Simone, a North Carolina native who spent most of her last decade in France, had been ill for some time, Clifton Henderson told Reuters by telephone.

Among her biggest hits were the playful "My Baby Just Cares for Me," which endeared her to a new generation of fans three decades after its release on her first record in 1957, and an emotional 1959 recording of Gershwin's "I Loves You Porgy."

Her repertoire also included the bitter and furious anti-racist protest song "Mississippi Goddam," inspired by the death of four children in the 1963 Ku Klux Klan bombing of a black church in Birmingham, Alabama, and "Old Jim Crow."

French police said Simone had died early on Monday at her home in Carry-le-Rouet, a small Mediterranean seaside town outside Marseille.

She had lived in a villa there with her chauffeur, a female helper and her pet dog for some four or five years, a Marseille police spokesman said. Her body was transferred to Marseille.

A child prodigy raised in a family of eight children, Simone studied piano at New York's prestigious Juilliard School of Music, a rare opportunity for a black woman in the 1950s.

She was dubbed the High Priestess of Soul, yet her musical range was enormous and she kept up with the musical times without ever losing her own distinctive voice and classically inspired piano style.

She was equally at home playing the Newport Jazz Festival or Carnegie Hall, and by the mid-60s, she was playing to diverse audiences, ranging from college students to older jazz connoisseurs, while her music cut across racial lines.

During her long career, Simone repeatedly crafted her own versions of other people's songs, giving a fresh sound to material ranging from Leonard Cohen to the Bee Gees. Reuters

Obasanjo wins poll amid outcry

ABUJA/LAGOS—President Olusegun Obasanjo waited on Tuesday to be formally declared the runaway winner of a Nigerian presidential election marred by charges of brazen vote-rigging.

Nigerians are hoping to end decades of instability by successfully transferring power from one elected government to another for the first time. A smooth electoral process would boost the international standing both of Nigeria and Obasanjo.

But mounting allegations of election fraud, following dramatic victories by his ruling party even in opposition strongholds, have been supported by some independent poll observers and have raised fears of violent unrest.

The main opposition party angrily dismissed official results. With votes counted in 725 of 774 areas by 0610 GMT, Obasanjo—a born-again Christian from southern Nigeria—had an unassailable lead with 21.9 million ballots, or 61.3 percent.

Muhammudu Buhari, from the predominantly Muslim north of the world's eighth biggest oil exporter, had 11.7 million votes or 32.6 percent. The other 18 candidates bidding to lead Africa's most populous country of 120 million shared the rest.

"We do not consider this to be an election by any stretch of the imagination," said a spokesman for Buhari's All Nigeria Peoples Party (ANPP).

The ANPP has called the other 28 opposition parties to a summit in Abuja on Tuesday to discuss their next steps.

Buhari threatened last week to launch "mass action" if there was any rigging in Saturday's voting for president and the country's 36 state governors.

Obasanjo's Peoples Democratic Party also won a landslide in the legislative vote, and went on to sweep 27 of the governorships, according to latest returns. Reuters

Returning OFW victim of SARS rumor

By Carla R. Gomez, PDI Visayas Bureau

BACOLOD CITY—An overseas contract worker who had just come home here from Singapore has become a victim of unfounded rumor that she has Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome. Her friends and neighbors have been avoiding her like a plague.

Lea Jamili was forced to call a press conference yesterday with the help of officials in her village to belie that she has SARS.

"I am healthy," Jamili declared, saying officials from the City Health Office had checked her and found that she has no SARS.

"No one has visited me yet since I arrived Friday in Bacolod from Manila, not even my neighbors," lamented Jamili during the press conference held at City Hall.

Jamili, 28, said she did not hide upon her arrival and did not know how the rumor, which she only learned from her family, started.

"I want to clarify matters since I may have difficulty finding employment here if people believe I have been infected with the SARS virus," she added.

News of the possibility that Jamili had SARS broke out early April when City Mayor Luzzviminda Valdez told the media that she was checking the report.

Officials of Barangay Taculing headed by Rommel Sanson, chair, said they decided to call a press conference to clarify matters since the residents had been alarmed upon learning that Jamili arrived Friday in the city.

Health officials confirmed that residents of Taculing were afraid of Jamili but they assured the public that she was very healthy and free from the SARS virus.

She was also issued a health card upon her arrival at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport.

Jamili left for Singapore to work as a domestic worker on Jan. 21 and returned to Manila on March 27. She was a first year computer secretarial student at the Bacolod City College when she applied for a job abroad.

Jamili said she developed coughs in Singapore from perspiration due to the hard work she was doing. She said she did all the household work, including taking care of her employer's dog.

"My employer is a nurse at the National University Hospital in Singapore, she said, and she was concerned about my health because she checked me up," she said.

Jamili said she decided to come home because she was suffering from depression due to homesickness. However, she added, another reason she came home was to avoid being infected by SARS which has affected many Singaporeans.

Negros Occidental Rep. Jose Apolinario Lozada yesterday urged the government to help OFWs in countries with SARS deaths who are planning to return to the Philippines to escape the contagious disease.

Air passengers snub SARS questionnaire in Tacloban

By Joey A. Gabieta, PDI Visayas Bureau

TACLOBAN CITY—The new "Task Force SARS" created by the health department in Eastern Visayas is facing cold, if not adverse, reactions from incoming passengers at the Daniel Z. Romualdez Airport.

Dr. Jaime Opinon, city health officer who heads the task force, said the majority of the passengers refused to take the questionnaire handed to them. Some even berated the task force members who approached them.

Lydia Yu, a city health office (CHO) employee, narrated that she got a scolding from a woman passenger who declined to take the questionnaire given to her. "I have to run to her just for her to answer our questionnaire only to be cursed by her," she said.

Taiwanese

A group of Taiwanese working on an infrastructure project in the region, however, readily agreed to answer the questionnaires, she said. Taiwan is one of the countries in Asia with SARS cases.

The six-member task force was created two weeks ago with the CHO as the lead agency. The regional offices of the DOH and the Air Transportation Office are part of the task force.

It was first implemented at the DZR Airport last April 15.

Opinon said the task force was created to ensure that no cases of SARS would find their way into Eastern Visayas.

Safety measures

He said all international entry points in the country, notably the Ninoy Aquino International Airport, have set up safety measures against the entry of SARS cases in the country but this was not enough.

He explained that a passenger found to be negative of all the signs and symptoms of the killer pneumonia at his arrival at the Naia might later develop the signs and symptoms of SARS during his or her stay in the region. "Remember that SARS has an incubation period of 14 days," he said.

Only passengers who came from abroad, especially those that have reported SARS cases, are asked to answer the questionnaire, Opinon said.

The questionnaire asks for the name of the passenger, his flight of origin and his place of destination in the region.

Thus way, he said, if the passenger develops the signs and symptoms of SARS, it will be easy for them to track him down and bring him right away to the Eastern Visayas Regional Medical Center, where two isolation rooms have been set up.

Hostile reactions

With hostile reactions from the passengers, Opinon had asked the cooperation of airlines flying into the region.

Philippine Airlines and Cebu Pacific have regular flights at the DZR Airport. PAL flies three times a day to the city and Cebu Pacific, twice a day.

Opinon said the passengers' attitude could be avoided if the airlines would inform them that they would be answering a questionnaire related to SARS when they arrive here.

"What is happening right now is that the members of the task force have to personally ask the incoming passengers as to their flight origin and for them to fill up our questionnaire," he said.

He admitted that they could not force the passengers if they refused to take their questionnaires.

Lydia Muria of the Cebu Pacific office in the city, however said in a telephone interview that while the objective of the task force was "laudable," they could not ask their passengers to take the questionnaire.

"Our company has yet to draw up a guideline for this... asking the passengers to fill up a questionnaire. We do respect the privacy of our passengers," Muria said.

Moro women to meet today to help end conflict in South

COTABATO CITY—Thousands of Muslim women from all over Mindanao will converge in Marawi City today to discuss how they can help end the decades-old conflict on the island.

Saguira Pandaliday, chairperson of the First Bangsamoro Women Assembly, said the participants were expected to formulate solutions to the conflict that has already claimed hundreds of thousands of lives since the late 60s.

At the end of the gathering, a document containing the solutions will be finalized and later presented to President Macapagal-Arroyo.

Efforts to end the decades-old Moro rebellion started as early as the 1970s during the Marcos regime, but in all the talks, Moro women were always been on the sidelines.

Although they claim that they were the most affected, Moro women say they were seldom consulted in the peace process, including the one involving the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF).

The MNLF signed a peace deal with the government in 1996.

Pandaliday said the participants would also tackle ideas that could help end immediately the fresh wave of violence that hit North Cotabato, Maguindanao, Sultan Kudarat and Lanao del Sur.

The skirmishes occurred when the military's Feb. 11 assault on the stronghold of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) in the Liguasan Marsh area.

Since the new wave of violence began, about 100,000 people have been displaced, with more than half of them still staying in various refugee centers.

Pandaliday said that even before the actual assembly, Moro women had already established that only the implementation of a genuine ceasefire would end the renewed hostilities, which had already claimed more than 300 lives, including those of civilians.

"We are asking government and rebel negotiators to resume the talks because their fighting has severely affected innocent civilians," she said.

Maj. Gen. Generoso Senga, head of the Army's 6th Infantry Division, said the resumption of hostilities should be blamed on the MILF.

He said the military was only responding to threats posed by the rebel group on civilian communities. Rosa-May de Guzman, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Army official asks local execs supporting rebels to resign

LEGAZPI CITY—A top Army officer has warned local government executives in the region against supporting the New People's Army and asked them to resign should they be found doing so.

Col. Pedro Magsino, commander officer of the 202nd Infantry Brigade based in Villahermosa, Daraga, Albay, made the warning following a recent clash between government troops and NPA rebels on Thursday last week that resulted in the death of five Army soldiers and the wounding of nine others.

Magsino said he had talked with some local officials, especially in Sorsogon, who were reported to have strong support to "lawless elements like the NPA."

He refused to name them but added that in Sorsogon, the supporters were not only barangay officials but also those in higher positions.

"I told them that they better stop. This will not bring any good things to our people. They should understand, they are accountable to the situation," Magsino said.

The military will always coordinate with the local officials, especially in far-flung barangays, in delivering basic services to the community, he said.

"All of us should work to attain our objective of bringing the lasting peace and progress to their areas," Magsino stressed. "But we will never allow any local official to coddle rebels. If they cannot stop supporting our enemy, they better resign!"

He confirmed that even mayors and governors were giving favors to the "enemies of the government." Ronnie Lorejo, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Ombudsman urged: Relieve Davao Or. gov

MATI, Davao Oriental—The Ombudsman for Mindanao was asked to suspend Gov. Maria Elena Palma Gil and her daughter-board member Maria Consuelo because their continued presence in the capitol was allegedly threatening witnesses in the graft charges filed against them.

Radoman Raul Antopuesto and former Palma Gil aide Rose Bayenting said the Palma Gils are the most influential people in the province and witnesses were afraid to come out for fear of reprisal.

The governor and her daughter have been accused of stealing government money by maintaining ghost employees.

The Palma Gils have denied any wrongdoing. Lawyer Alejandro Aquino, speaking on behalf of the governor, said the charges appeared to be politically motivated, but he did not elaborate.

In their appeal to the Ombudsman early this month, Antopuesto and Bayenting said the suspension would prevent the governor and her daughter from "tampering with or concealing public records and from coercing witnesses which they can possibly do as they are the most powerful and influential people in Davao Oriental."

Bayenting, a close relative of the Palma Gils, said she could attest to the credibility of the graft charges.

"At times, Board Member Palma Gil would have me deposit the salaries of these ghost employees in her savings account ...," she said in an earlier statement accompanying the complaint filed last month.

Antopuesto, who works with Manila Broadcasting Co., said a number of employees in the provincial government were willing to support the complaint.

"But they said their lives were being threatened, they were already being threatened by these powerful people in Davao Oriental. Ferdinand Zuasola, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Bishop asked to apologize over 'jueteng'

ILAGAN, Isabela—Members of the provincial board have asked Bishop Ramon Villena of Nueva Vizcaya to apologize to Faustino Dy after the Church leader accused the governor of influencing the resurgence of jueteng in the province.

The board members, in a resolution, said Villena should apologize to Dy "more so, in the propriety and humaneness of recognizing the innocence of (Governor Dy) as to his allegations."

They dismissed Villena's accusations that Dy was involved in jueteng operations and demanded that "efforts be earnestly made by the grace of the good bishop, to immediately clear (Dy's) name."

The INQUIRER tried but failed to reach Villena for comment. A staff member at the bishop's house in Bayombong, Nueva Vizcaya, said Villena was out of town on Tuesday.

Last month, Villena accused Dy and Chief Supt. Romulo Sales, Cagayan Valley police director, of putting pressure on top police officials of Nueva Vizcaya to allow the return of the illegal numbers game in the province.

The bishop said this had forced Senior Supt. Jesus Manubay, provincial police director, to allow jueteng operations in the province.

Dy dismissed Villena's allegation and even threatened to sue the bishop for libel.

Senior Board Member Ysmael Ateza, the resolution's sponsor, said Dy "(has no time) to engage in some clandestine activities, such as dealings in jueteng operations, much more in a place like Nueva Vizcaya," due to his development projects in the province.

"The statements of the bishop are libelous in character as these were released without regard to the sensibilities of (Dy) as a very hardworking and honest government official," the resolution said. Villamor Visaya Jr., PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

Keep Pandacan terminal alive?

40 Barangay Captains say, "Yes."

Why did 40 out of 43 Barangay Captains say "Yes" to the terminal and "No" to Ordinance 8027? Because the legislation doesn't close down an oil terminal, it cuts off the community's lifeline. Is safety the issue? No. In more than 80 years there has never been a serious incident. In fact, we're making the terminal even safer. What are the consequences when 50% of the country's gasoline and diesel supplies don't get to consumers? What happens when 90% of the country's supply of lubricants is disrupted? Who will the public and business turn to? Where do the jobs go? Who do local businesses rely on after we go? All the economic and social assistance we contributed over the years. Where will it come from in the future? The result is clear to the Barangay Captains. Close Pandacan on April 30 and the results could be terminal.

Probe of P130-M Iloilo housing project urged

By Ma. Diosa Labiste
PDI Visayas Bureau

ILOILO CITY—Four city councilors have asked the Office of the Ombudsman (OMB)-Visayas to evaluate its findings that the city's P130-million housing project was fraught with irregularities.

The officials decided to submit their investigation report to the OMB-Visayas based in Cebu City after the city council voted it down last week.

By a vote of 6-5 with one abstention, the council on April 9 rejected the report of the Committee on Good Government regarding alleged irregularities on the housing project.

The committee members, headed by Councilor Raul Gonzales Jr., said they decided to

Joining Gonzales were Councilors Ma. Concordia Manikan, Antonio Pesina and Erwin Plagata.

The 106-page committee report had identified irregularities in the 413-unit housing project intended for city government employees.

The housing project stands on the city-owned lot at Barangay Ungka, Pavia town, 9 km from here, and was built using funds from bonds floated by the city government.

The committee started its investigation in September last year when one of the subcontractors, Rudy Gonzales, alleged that the main contractor, Ace Builders Enterprises (ABE), had been using sub-standard construction materials.

Emboldened by Gonzales' move, seven more subcontractors filed a complaint before the city council confirming Gonzales' claim.

They added that ABE failed to release their payment and construction materials on time, causing delays in the project.

The city engineers said the contractor used 0.30 mm instead of 0.45 mm thick corrugated galvanized iron for roofing, used 3/16" instead of 1/4 thick plywood for ceiling, used 1/2" x 12" instead of 1" x 12" lumber and 9 mm instead of 10 mm diameter stirrups on beams.

They also noted "poor workmanship" on the wall finish, installation of жалюзи, roofing, gutter and tiles on the bathroom and kitchen of the newly built houses. The pipes leading to septic tanks and faucets were not properly installed.

During its regular session in April, the city council rejected the committee report blacklisting ABE "until further investigation."

But it approved a resolution rescinding the contract between the city government and ABE.

The committee report also asked for a review of the contract on the housing project, and enforcement of administrative sanction against some personnel of the city engineer's office and members of the Prequalification, Bids and Award Committee (PBAC) for their "failure to protect public interest."

It called for the investigation of former Mayor Mansueto Malabon and members of the previous city council, especially former Councilors Jose Junio Jacala, Eddie Laczi and German Gonzales, "for their role in the planning, approval and execution" of the housing project. The three were members of the PBAC.

The housing project was carried out with a "design and construct" scheme, wherein the contractor, not the city government, drew up the project design. The council approved the scheme on Nov. 17, 1999.

Several PBAC members, like former city treasurer Romeo Manikan and Ely Bagtasus of the city engineer's office, said the "design and construct" scheme was disadvantageous to the city but they either dropped out of succeeding meetings or were won over by those in favor of the scheme. The committee report showed that the previous council approved the contract with ABE on Jan. 31, 2001, without even seeing the actual document with the signatures of Malabon and ABE representatives, and the attachments.

Two months later, the council approved a "deed of agreement of deposit accounts to the city" as signing its Internal Revenue Allotment and other collateral to pay for its bonds, ratifying the trust indenture, guaranty and underwriting agreements without seeing the notarized document but only the draft.

Less than a month after ABE started the construction, the city engineer's office started to notice poor workmanship in the housing units.

Rebels raid sugar mill

PORAC, Pampanga—About 30 New People's Army (NPA) rebels raided a mill here of the country's biggest international sugar trading firm on April 14, police said. The attackers took two .38 cal. revolvers, three shotguns and five hand-held radios from Sweet Crystals Integrated Sugar Mills Corp. in Barangay Planas, according to Senior Supt. Rodolfo Mendoza, provincial police director. It took the rebels only 10 minutes to disarm the mill's security guards, a company official told the INQUIRER. Tonette Orejas and Jun Matig, PDI Central Luzon Desk

Rebel's body exhumed

CITY OF SAN FERNANDO—Army soldiers last week exhumed the remains of a communist rebel executed by the New People's Army (NPA) in 2001 on suspicion that he was a military spy. Soldiers of the Army's 71st Infantry Battalion dug up the remains of Robert Figuracion near a suspected NPA camp at Barangay San Roque in Lupao, Nueva Ecija. Col. Jovena Narcise, chief of the Army's 702nd Infantry Brigade, said Christopher Arquines, an NPA rebel who was captured on April 12 in Cuyapo town, led soldiers to the camp and the burial site. Narcise said Arquines, alias Ka Argy or Jerry, claimed that Figuracion, of Barangay Tayabo in San Jose City, was abducted on Nov. 16, 2001 and "summarily executed" by the NPA's Nueva Ecija provincial committee's Front 3. Tonette Orejas, PDI Central Luzon Desk

Unrest at PIA

CITY OF SAN FERNANDO—Unrest has gripped the Public Information Agency in Central Luzon after Renato Velasco, PIA director general, bared the plan to abolish the agency's regional and provincial offices in Central Luzon to streamline the bureaucracy and cut on costs. "This development has come as a shock to us especially since your earlier directive was towards the opposite direction—that of strengthening the regional offices and deactivating provincial information centers," the 34 employees of the PIA regional office said in an appeal to Velasco last week. They urged Velasco to reconsider the "deactivation" plan saying it posed adverse consequences to the agency's program in a "growth center" region. Tonette Orejas, PDI Central Luzon Desk

Fake doctor nabbed

LIPA CITY—Police have arrested an abortionist who posed as a doctor, after a woman complained that her baby whom the doctor was supposed to treat had been kept away from her since a hydrocephalus operation last month. The woman later found that her baby was already dead. Arrested was a certain Aida Sawali, of Barangay Inosuban, on charges of kidnapping, serious illegal detention, infanticide, illegal practice of medicine, estafa and extortion. An entrapment operation revealed Sawali's illegal practice. Mei Magsino, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

SARS-free

CALAPAN CITY—"Mindoro is SARS-free," declared provincial police director Voltaire Calzada after clearing the information from the Calapan City Coast guard that a yacht of non-quarantined Chinese were going to Puerto Galera four days ago. The Philippine Ports Authority, Puerto Galera police and all chairs of barangays along the shoreline who were immediately alerted on the news said no such yacht was sighted in Puerto Galera. Madonna Virolo, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Wanted man falls

CAMP VICENTE LIM, Laguna—Police arrested the 14th "most notorious" criminal in the Calabarzon area last Wednesday. Police identified the suspect as Marvin Retuerma, who was nabbed in Tagumpay Resort, Pansol, Calamba City, at 12:30 a.m. Reports showed that Retuerma was the principal suspect in the murder of Ronald Opana on March 12, 2000 at Barangay Tandang Kotyo, Tanay, Rizal. Romulo Ponte, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Illegal recruiters

GENERAL SANTOS CITY—Police on Monday arrested two women on charges of illegal recruitment. The suspects, Verna Derequito and Julianie Pactoi, were the subjects of an arrest warrant issued by Judge Eddie Rojas of the Regional Trial Court Branch 37 here. Police were still looking for the alleged owner of an unlicensed recruitment agency. The couple, along with Pactoi, had allegedly been recruiting jobseekers in the South Cotabato-Sarangani-General Santos (SocSargen) area for non-existent jobs abroad. Pactoi told reporters that she had received money from one of the victims but added that she was not aware it was intended as placement fee. Aquiles Zonia, PDI Mindanao Bureau

A feast to celebrate the bounty of the sea

By Yolanda Sotelo-Fuertes
Lingayen, Pangasinan

LONG before Filipinos developed a penchant to celebrate every produce or product in their towns through festivals, Pangasinan's capital town of Lingayen has been celebrating the bounty of the sea.

Historians say the Pista'y Dayat (sea festival) started in the early 1960s with simple thanksgiving rites by fishermen in two villages in Lingayen.

The fishermen would go to the beach on May 1 to say a prayer of thanks to God for the plentiful harvests all year long. Then they took a dip at the sea, which they believed had miraculous healing property. They would later partake of simple meals, all derived from the sea.

It is not clear why May 1 was chosen to be the day, but it could be because it was Labor Day and a holiday, old folks say. For many workers and their families, it was an opportunity to beat the summer heat by frolicking on the beach.

Besides, fishermen are laborers, too, and because the Lingayen Gulf has always been generous to them, they find it fitting to offer thanksgiving prayers for its bounty.

It was not long before local officials saw the affair's potential to lure tourists and started to line up activities to make their stay happy and memorable.

The residents and their guests will again rendezvous with the sea this Labor Day. For them, it is a summer tryst, a promise that must be kept with the sea which is never selfish with its resources.

But it's no longer a one-day event. The Pista'y Dayat has evolved into the country's biggest and longest beach party that started on April 14 and will end on May 9.

The gulf continues to nurture the province and its neighbors, and although its resources are fast being depleted, according to studies, the people continue to celebrate the sea festival. Besides, the gulf occasionally surprises them when giant sea creatures like whale sharks and dolphins show up, stay for some days, and quietly disappear.

Gov. Victor Agbayani has given the green light for the inclusion of more features as part of the provincial government's efforts to promote local tourism.

The festivities started with the opening of the Tianggehan sa Pista'y Dayat that featured various products on the capitol grounds. The Panangidayew Agro, Trade, Tourism and Seafood Fair opens today and will run up to May 2, also at the capitol grounds.

Various activities will be undertaken daily until May 9, but the grand opening is on April 28 at the capitol plaza. It will be marked by the "Ating Yaman" photography contest, the "Pinta Ko, Alay Ko" exhibition, a scroll painting competition, a drum and lyre contest and wall climbing on the beach front.

The April 30 revelry will start with the "Buhay sa Buhangin Sculptures by the Gulf," followed by the Paloro ng Lahu. It will be capped by the pageant and coronation night of the Lingas na Dayat (Muse of the Sea) 2003 at the Narciso Ramos Sports and Cultural Center.

Discovering Ilocos Sur in a dining yacht

By Frank Cimatu
Candon City

ILOCOS Sur is known for its ancestral houses, churches done in the distinct earthquake baroque style, tiny Vigan longganizas (sausages), sticky rice desserts like Candon kalamay and Royal bibingka and empanadas. Otherwise, the province is one long stretch of road as one cruises toward the white beach of Pagudpud, Ilocos Norte, for example.

Unknown to most travelers, Ilocos Sur has some of the unspoiled and interesting beaches in Northern Luzon, which can be seen on the left side of the 150-kilometer stretch of the Maharlika Highway, from Ilocos Sur to Ilocos Norte.

One wouldn't have known it but the beaches of Sinit, Sta. Lucia, Santa and Candon towns are among the best that the country can offer. And because one passes through them without knowing it, they are as unspoiled as when Juan de Salcedo or Limahong had set foot on them.

Be your own conquistador as you try the Locandia coastal cruise, relaxing by the South China Sea aboard an oil tanker refurbished into a dining yacht.

Ilocos Sur Rep. Eric Singson and a group of friends decided this year to bring the "Tennessee Walker," which brings tourists from the Manila Bay to Corregidor Island to Ilocos Sur, in the hope that tourists will also discover the province's coastline.

"I would not have wanted this but if this is the only way to attract tourists, why not?" Singson said.

The Tennessee Walker used to be the oil tanker Featheray G-I until it was given a makeover in 1992 and remodeled into a luxury cruise ship that can accommodate 250 passengers.

The MacArthur (top deck) can accommodate 150 people, while the air-conditioned Admiral Dewey Room can fit in 100 passengers.

Singson had an agreement with the Tennessee Walker owner that the yacht would stay in Ilocos from October to June and return to Manila Bay the rest of the year.

Four-hour trip

The cruise starts at Singson's resort at the Santiago Cove and the four-hour ride will take visitors to the coast of San Esteban and back. It is a picturesque view of Ilocandia as the ship passes along coconut groves and quaint villages.

Passengers can sing "Moon River" or listen to a rondalla by the open deck, or dine in style at the Dewey.

"We want to assure you that the food will be the highlight of the cruise," said Robby Goco, the cruise consultant on food and beverages.

Goco, who owns Tequila Joe in Metro Manila, decided to use ingredients found only in the Candon public market and in the smaller town markets in the province.

For only P200, a guest can mix 75 different ingredients from tuna, seaweed, bihon (noodles), mushrooms, vegetables, native chicken, pork, beef, Vigan longganisa, baguet and many others, mix them with 20 different sauces and have them cooked in the gas-powered oven.

The tuxedoed waiters can also bring guests red wine and other drinks.

In fact, it was the romantic notion of the cruise that prompted Singson to come out with a sunset cruise, but he finally decided to scrap it because the coastline would be too dark to be appreciated anyway.

The sunset cruise was later modified so that the guests could return to port at sunset.

Lunch and dinner cruises from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. cost P350 per person, while sightseeing cruises starting 8 a.m. cost P100 per person. Weddings, class reunions and other chartered cruises can also be arranged.

The President's visit to Pikit yesterday, however, was marred when Marines clearing the area stepped on two land mines. The explosions, a few hours before the President arrived, injured four soldiers.

Col. Cardozo Luna, commander of the Army's 602nd Infantry Brigade, said the explosions occurred about a kilometer away from Barangay Bagoing, where a makeshift helipad had been constructed for the presidential chopper.

Luna said the explosions were apparently not intended for the President or her party. "Those were left by the rebels during the skirmishes in February and it exploded just now," Luna told Radio dxMS in Cotabato City.

The soldiers sustained serious leg injuries, the military said. The identities of the wounded troopers from the 8th Marine Battalion Landing Team were not immediately available, but Luna said they were quickly airlifted to the hospital of the 6th Infantry Division in Maguindanao province.

Eld Kabalu, spokesperson for the Moro Islamic Liberation Front, said the explosives could have been one of the many bombs dropped by Air Force planes during the military's offensive in the Bulok Complex.

Human rights

The President said the order would be carried out with due regard for the constitutional rights of every individual.

But immediately after she ordered a crackdown on terrorism in Davao City after the April 2 Sasa explosion, which killed at least 16 people, Muslims in the city said they were being singled out.

The military and the police conducted raids after the other on Muslim communities. At least three Muslims have disappeared after unidentified armed men abducted them.

But Ms Macapagal was unperturbed.

"The lawless elements have once again launched bomb attacks and recently exploded bombs in Region 11 and 12, mostly recently in Davao City, resulting in the loss of innocent lives and destruction of property," she said.

"Lawless elements continue to threaten and perpetrate acts of terrorism and lawless violence in open defiance of the duly constituted authorities," she said.

Ms Macapagal said the existing situation "necessitates an immediate and effective government response to avert further loss of innocent lives and destruction of property."

"Whenever it becomes necessary, the President as the Commander in Chief of all the Armed Forces of the Philippines, may call out such armed forces to prevent or suppress lawless violence," Ms Macapagal added.

Mayor Rodrigo Duterte, the President's "crisis manager" for Mindanao, said the bombing incidents in the city proved that there was a "clear and present danger" to the people.

"That is why the government has to continue with its fight," he said.

But Kabalu said the President's declaration was meant to justify the massive deployment of soldiers in the Bulok area, near the position of its fighters.

"We have already accepted the fact that we are being used again to justify the deployment of troops and perhaps, for additional funds for the military," he said.

Although Ms Macapagal fell short of actually naming the MILF as one of the targets, he said experience showed that the government's anti-terror campaign always included MILF rebels.

Mindanao not next US 'battlefront'

THE PRESIDENT yesterday dismissed suggestions that parts of Mindanao will be the next "battlefront" for the US-led global war on terror.

American troops to be deployed in Sulu province later this year will only be engaged in training their local counterparts as well as carrying out civil projects, President Macapagal-Arroyo said in a statement.

"There is no sense in speculations that Sulu will be a new battlefield involving US troops," Ms Macapagal said, dismissing claims by leftist groups. "American troops will not land and shoot."

She stressed US troops would also be barred from actual combat against the Abu Sayyaf, the bandit group both governments have linked to the al-Qaeda terror network. AFP

Meralco filed its latest motion after the third division "denied with finality" on April 9 the company's motion for reconsideration, which sought to reverse the Nov. 15, 2002 order that Meralco refund customers the amount it had overcharged for four years from 1994.

The excessive charges stemmed from the decision of the firm to treat income taxes and other assets not related to the business as its operating expenses.

Khan told reporters that the high court, particularly the full court, would not give "due course" to Meralco's latest motion.

"It will not be given due course," he said. "There's a decision. (Meralco should) follow the decision," he said.

President Macapaga-Arroyo said Meralco must comply with the court order but hinted her administration may be open to a settlement. Ms Macapagal said Meralco, which has warned of possible bankruptcy, "must find a way to meet its obligations to the public in line with the judicious use of its own means and resources."

However, the government, a minority shareholder, will support any legal means to resolve this issue that is acceptable to the court and the consumers," the President said in a statement.

Meralco president Jesus Francisco said he had no problem with the statement of Ms Macapagal. "Everybody knows that the Supreme Court order must be implemented."

Clarification

"The motion for consideration that we filed (with the high court) is still a clarification on its decision," Francisco said. "But if it rules with 'final finality,' we will of course follow its order."

Meralco officials had said the motion was a last resort for the firm.

Bayan Muna partylist Rep. Crispin Beltran called on the high court to stand pat on its decision. "Every centavo Meralco overcharged consumers should be returned."

He said Meralco should be cited for contempt or charged with estafa should it fail to comply.

Consumer groups have suggested that Meralco refund the excess charges either in lump-sum cash, deductions on monthly bills or shares in the company.

Calling Meralco a "bully in the playground," the Freedom from Debt Coalition blasted the Lopezes, owners of Meralco, for their continued defiance of the Supreme Court.

The FDC said the firm was holding the consumers hostage, particularly those who have signed their intent to be owners of Meralco through a stock option.

Energy Secretary Vincent Perez Jr. said he would gather within the week representatives from Meralco, consumer groups and the Energy Regulatory Commission to start talks on how to implement the multibillion-peso refund ordered by the Supreme Court.

Perez said the talks should push through despite "whatever motions or appeals that Meralco may file" with the high court.

Oral argument

In a 23-page motion, Meralco lawyers from the Quison, Makalintal, Barot, Torres & Ibarra said the high court should accept its latest motion, and be given the opportunity of an oral argument.

The country's largest power distributor asked the full court to study the Nov. 15, 2002 ruling of the third division, and its April 9, 2003 decision denying a reconsideration sought by the firm.

In its latest motion, the power distributor said it was willing to refund the excess charges it imposed on its more than three million customers. "In its latest motion, the power distributor said it was willing to refund the excess charges it imposed on its more than three million customers. In its latest motion, the power distributor said it was willing to refund the excess charges it imposed on its more than three million customers."

The firm said that if the high court sustained the original ruling, the computation should vary from year to year. "As it is clearly indicated in the Energy Regulatory Board (ERB) decision itself, the P0.167 per kilowatt-hour supposed excess collection was determined by the ERB for the period beginning Feb. 1, 1994 to Jan. 3, 1995," said Meralco.

The excess collection could not pertain to periods after January 1995, "as the figures used in the computation vary from year to year." With reports from Carlito Pablo, Gerald G. Lacuarra, Juliet Labog-Javellana and AFP

11 more die of SARS in China, 5 in HK, 1 in Malaysia

es stood at 918.

The central government has sent more medical teams to affected areas amid growing fears that the virus rocking Beijing will sweep the country. Authorities have raised the number of probable SARS cases in Beijing 13-fold in the past two days from 44 to 482, with another 610 suspected cases.

More worrying for the central government are figures showing that the illness was spreading from Sichuan province in the southwest to Liaoning in the northeast. Nineteen of China's 31 provinces and municipalities have reported SARS cases.

WHO's dire prediction was reinforced by Premier Wen Jiabao, who admitted that the health system was ill prepared to deal with a SARS epidemic in the country-side, where 70 percent of China's 1.3 billion people live.

Such an epidemic could spread "before we know it" and "the consequences could be too dreadful to contemplate," the Chinese premier said in a speech published on Monday.

WHO medical officer Jeff McFarland on Tuesday said that while the reporting system was now working better, China must also establish the places where SARS patients had gone to since their infection. Only then could the central government develop better epidemic control measures, he said.

Where, how, why

"The date of onset is the most important figure to understand the epidemic better," MacFarland said. "Where, how, why, when the patients came down, the demographics of a person. This can tell us a lot about how the epidemic is spreading. This is the data that we need to get a better sense of the magnitude of the epidemic," he said.

The Communist Party boss in Beijing has directed city officials to step up the tracing of people who might have been exposed to the highly contagious respiratory illness and to report promptly and accurately.

"Do a good job of analyzing statistics, effectively control and cut off the source of infection," Liu Qi was quoted as saying by newspapers.

There is no cure, vaccine or approved diagnostic test yet for SARS, but Chinese health authorities said they were planning to mass produce a fast SARS test kit.

The method, called the Enzyme Link Immuno Adsorbent Assay, could detect the SARS virus within an hour, Yang Huanming, director of the Beijing Genomics Institute, was quoted as saying by the Xinhua news agency.

Yang said the current estimated daily production of the test kit could meet the demands of 10,000 people, and the output is expected to grow to 100,000 a day soon.

Quarantine measures appeared to be paying off in Hong Kong's fight against SARS and its leader voiced growing confidence about beating the disease. But experts said Tuesday it was unclear when the crisis would end.

"My prediction is in three months' time Hong Kong can return to almost normal, not completely normal," said Dr. Lo Wing-lok, president of the Hong Kong Medical Association.

Lo, an infectious disease expert who also serves as a lawmaker, told The Associated Press that he expected that by then, SARS would be mostly contained, but Hong Kong "might see sporadic cases."

Hong Kong took a step toward normalcy Tuesday as 200,000 secondary students returned to class after a three-week precautionary school closure. But the students and teachers were told to wear surgical masks and have their temperatures taken daily. Younger students were still staying home, and a few schools refused to open. Reports from AP and Reuters owner of the controversial account in Equitable PCI Bank. The envelope was opened in the presence of Pimentel, then-Ombudsman Amiano Desierto and others.

"Hopefully, Senator Pimentel will testify," Estrada told the Inquirer the other day.

At the Senate, Pimentel said he was prepared to do so. "I am willing to be a witness for the defense. Of course, I'll go there if I'll be subpoenaed by the court," he said.

Estrada said the 11-10 vote to keep the envelope closed during his impeachment trial "triggered the walkout" of House prosecutors and eventually led to the massive demonstrations at the Edsa Shrine that resulted in his ouster.

"After that walkout I was charged in the streets. But days after they (the Macapagal administration) grabbed power, the second envelope was opened and revealed the name of Jaime Dichaves," he said.

Pimentel issued a caveat: He said he would testify only on the issue of the envelope. "I will tell the truth (about) what I saw in the envelope. Maybe I can produce a copy of the content of the envelope."

He said the envelope contained deposit and withdrawal slips related to the Velarde account.

Estrada is accused of having maintained the Velarde account using an alias to hide alleged ill-gotten wealth, including kickbacks, commissions and "jueteng" payola collections.

Key evidence?

Estrada's court-appointed lawyers have cited one of the documents from the envelope as a key piece of evidence proving that Dichaves, not their client, owned the Velarde account.

They referred to an Aug. 25, 1999 letter purportedly signed by Dichaves asking then EPCIB senior vice president Romy Dy Tang to open an account under the name "Jose Velarde" at the bank's Binondo branch.

Estrada complained that when this letter was discovered inside the second envelope, the media did not give it the same prominence as it had other major developments leading to his downfall.

Told of Estrada's plans involving Pimentel, Noel Malaya, one of his court-appointed lawyers, confirmed that matters relating to the second envelope would indeed constitute "our first evidence" to be presented in court.

"We believe we will score big on this one," he said, welcoming the senator's inclusion as a potential defense witness.

But human rights lawyer Romulo Capulong, a private complainant during the impeachment trial, questioned the authenticity of the Dichaves letter, saying it might have been "surreptitiously inserted" as a last-ditch ploy to get Estrada off the hook.

The Estrada trial at the Sandiganbayan is currently in a lull after state prosecutors rested their case last April 9.

Also at the Sandiganbayan yesterday, state prosecutors pressed for the sequestration of the so-called "Boracay mansion," a P142-million property believed to have been purchased with Estrada's ill-gotten wealth.

Upon their request, the court summoned a broadcast reporter who saw an alleged proof of Estrada's ownership of the mansion—a tag under an old carpet bearing his name as the buyer.

ABS-CBN's Mariton Pacheco was subpoenaed for being the first to find the tag during the court's March 19 inspection of the now abandoned residence in New Manila, Quezon City. Pacheco is expected to present video footage of the carpet tag in court today.

Estrada has never denied that his family by ex-starter Laarni Enriquez occupied the mansion for a few months in 2000. He has insisted, however, that the house was owned by Dichaves, who merely lent it to him.

cial coordinators of the peasant-worker group Anakpawis in Oriental Mindoro, and Virgilio Catoy, a member of the Gawad CCP awardee audio-visual group ST-Exposure for the stirring video documentary "Alingawngaw ng mga Punlo." They were found hogtied on a road in a remote barangay of Bongabong town at around 2 a.m. yesterday.

The five were part of an 11-member quick reaction team (QRT) of human rights advocates led by Karapatan-ST that went to Oriental Mindoro on Black Saturday to look into new reports of abduction allegedly perpetrated by the military in Barangay Buong Lupa, Gloria town.

Favorite colonel

The Bagong Alyansang Makabayan (Bayan) and Karapatan blamed President Macapagal-Arroyo's "favorite colonel" for the deaths of the two human rights leaders.

The two groups pointed to Col. Jovito Palparan, head of the 204th Infantry Brigade of the Philippine Army, as the one responsible for the deaths of Marcellana and Gumanoy. Bayan and Karapatan called Palparan "the notorious Butcher of Mindoro."

"The killings must stop before the blood of more human rights advocates and activists is forcibly shed at the altar of President Arroyo's 'strong republic,'" said Marie Hilao Enriquez, Karapatan nanona, secretary general.

Palparan denied the allegations. "The accusations are all baseless and unfounded. But that's nothing new because every time there are incidents like this, they always blame the military," he told the Inquirer in a cellular phone interview from Fort Bonifacio.

Marcellana came into prominence last year after exposing human rights abuses in Southern Tagalog, especially in Oriental Mindoro, which she claimed were perpetrated by the military.

In an earlier interview in Lucena City last Holy Week at the kick off of the "People's Calvary" caravan, Marcellana said 1,019 cases of human rights violations had been recorded in Southern Tagalog since the ascent to power of Ms. Macapagal.

"In her three-year term, 64 have already been killed. But instead of facilitating a fair and impartial trial against the main suspect, Col. Jovito Palparan was promoted to a star-general," Marcellana said.

Only Marcellana, Eden's husband and secretary general of Kasama-TK, said their children, Danna Marie, 7, and Ara, 6, were now asking for the whereabouts of their mother. He said the last time they contacted his wife on a cell phone, their eldest daughter advised her to be careful as she might get into trouble.

Edwin Alog, Bayan-ST deputy secretary general, said members of Marcellana's group were abducted at about 7 p.m. on Monday in Barangay Maibon in Nauyan.

Alsa Masa

Alog said the abductors introduced themselves as members of an anti-communist group called Alsa Masa. "But we believed that just like the notorious 'Bonnet Gang' in the area, members of the group belong to the military," he said.

Alsa Masa is an anti-communist vigilante group that started in Davao during the time of former President Corazon Aquino.

Asked if there was an Alsa Masa group in the province, Palparan said: "The people in the area have long been fed up with the terrorist and extortion activities of the New People's Army. And these leftist groups were known coddlers and supporters of the communist rebels."

"The people are now angry with the likes of Marcellana's group. Makulit sila (They're irritating)," he said without elaborating.

Palparan consoled with the families of the victims, adding they would assist the police in solving the crime.

Based on accounts of several witnesses, Marcellana and 10 others human rights activists were aboard a van on their way to Caapan City when a group of armed men intercepted them. The armed men then boarded the van. At about 8 p.m., the armed group disembarked and hogtied Marcellana and four others.

The remaining six, along with the driver of the van who was heavily battered and bruised, were left behind, while the armed group that took Marcellana and the rest boarded a separate private jeep and drove off into a forested area in the direction of Victoria town.

Ignacio Bunye, the administration wants to maintain "cordial" relations with Dante Ang, President Macapagal's former personal publicist.

In two articles published so far in his own newspaper, The Manila Times, Ang had railed against the allegorical dog "Viaye" and the latter's "kennel," saying big business transactions have to pass through them or else their proponents are harassed through lawsuits.

It is clear, according to Palace insiders, that Ang was referring to lawyer Arthur "Pancho" Villaraza as Viaye and his influential Villaraza-Anganco Law Office, formerly the Carpio, Villaraza and Cruz Law Office. The kennel refers to his law firm. Two of its former partners were appointed by the President to key government positions: Antonio Carpio to the Supreme Court and Avelino Cruz as Presidential Legal Counsel. Another senior partner, Simeon Marcelo, is now the Ombudsman.

Villaraza's law office has serviced the Arroyo family since the 1980s and has been holding office for sometime now in the LIA building in Makati, which is named after the mother of First Gentleman Jose Miguel Arroyo.

In his articles, Ang warned of "ugly" consequences once supposed businesses coerced by Viaye to come up with cash up front start coming out in the open.

"The relationship remains cordial," Bunye said when asked to describe the current ties between President Macapagal and Ang, who served as her chief image maker since she first ran for the Senate in the early '90s.

"We prefer it remains that way," Bunye also said in his media briefing yesterday.

In a short interview after his briefing, Bunye said that Ang, who resigned as President Macapagal's senior consultant for public relations in November 2002, continued to advise his former No. 1 client from time to time.

"I suppose some of his advice are followed, some not," Bunye said when asked to describe Ang's current role as Ms. Macapagal's administration.

Bunye, however, professed lack of knowledge on the ties that bind the First Family and the Villaraza-Anganco Law Office.

"I am not familiar with that," Bunye said.

Bunye is the father of lawyer Patricia Bunye, herself a member of the law firm. The younger Bunye served as spokesperson of Mr. Arroyo until her father was named as press secretary last year.

SARS-hit village isolated three zones during the isolation period scheduled to last until April 26. It is headed by Alcala Mayor Juanito Collado and the rural health officer.

It was not immediately known how many households or persons, most of whom are relatives of Adela, are affected by the isolation order. The village has about 800 residents, including children, Collado said.

"Even before the isolation of the three zones, the residents already felt the stigma of being in contact with the probable SARS victim, with people from other barangays refusing to go near them," the mayor said. "Isolating the residents makes them angry, but this is for [everybody's benefit]."

Mejia said Catalan lived in Zone 1 and her relatives in Zone 3, and thus passed through Zone 2 when she made family visits upon her arrival April 5 from Canada.

The decision to isolate the three zones was made, Mejia said, after four of Catalan's relatives—her father, a brother-in-law who served as her driver, an 11-year-old boy and a baby—developed high fever and were taken April 19 to the Research Institute of Tropical Medicine (RITM) in Alabang, Metro Manila.

The brother-in-law, the boy and the baby have recovered but are still under watch and in isolation at the RITM. The father, Mauricio, died at 5:40 a.m. yesterday.

Dayrit said Mauricio's death did not mean that there was now "local" or "secondary" transmission of the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome.

"The moment somebody who had come in contact with [Catalan] comes down with pneumonia or respiratory attacks, then we have a SARS case here," Dayrit said at a press briefing yesterday.

Dayrit said Catalan's father had an "abscess" or infection in the abdomen brought about by the presence of pus.

"That could explain why he had fever," Dayrit said.

The 250 others with whom Catalan had contact have not come down with SARS symptoms.

Ruptured appendix

Relatives, however, insisted that Mauricio died of a ruptured appendix.

They said Mauricio and his wife arrived from Canada in February.

"He was already sickly and was in fact confined at a hospital in Dagupan sometime after he arrived," said a cousin of Mauricio's. "He complained of pain in his lower abdomen, and I think it was his kidney that troubled him."

A niece said the family was planning to sue officials of the Department of Health who had earlier refused to release Mauricio for surgery.

The sealed coffin containing the body will be released only on April 26, when the quarantine period for those who had contact with Catalan shall have ended.

Nevertheless, Dayrit advised the family against holding a wake, to limit the possible spread of SARS among the other relatives and friends of the Catalons.

Food and medicine

Pangasinan health officer Mejia said Gov. Victor Agbayani had issued instructions to provide the residents of the three zones the necessary medicines and vitamins.

The provincial health office is providing the households a chlorine solution for disinfecting their homes.

Collado said the residents would be provided food during the isolation period, thus preventing their movement and the possible spread of the disease.

He said he was awaiting a recommendation from epidemiologist Revelyn Cayabyab of the regional health office, to declare the village under a state of health emergency.

"We will endorse the recommendation to the municipal council, which must pass a resolution declaring the barangay under a state of health emergency, so we can use our calamity fund to buy food for the residents," he said.

The mayor also said the local government planned to coordinate with national agencies to address the problem.

He said that as an "extreme" measure, the local government would ask for additional policemen to "guard" the residents and prevent them from going in and out of the isolated zones.

"But this is just in case some residents will insist on [leaving] their houses and the confined zones," the mayor said.

Panic and anger

At a press briefing, officials of the DOH and World Health Organization sought to downplay fears that Catalan was a "super-spreader" in view of the big number of people and places she came in contact with and visited prior to her death.

"You cannot consider her a super-spreader until those who came in contact with her—254—turn out positive for SARS," Dayrit said.

Told about the panic that the deaths of Catalan and her father had supposedly caused in their hometown, Dayrit called on the public to calm down and to strictly follow quarantine procedures.

"Eventually, SARS cases will occur," he said. "Because of the nature of this organism, you cannot shut it out completely. But you can minimize the havoc if you follow precautions."

He called on overseas Filipino workers returning from SARS-infected areas to wear masks, avoid contacts with family members and go into voluntary quarantine for at least 14 days.

The public is also advised to observe proper hygiene, like washing the hands thoroughly, covering the mouth and nose when sneezing, and avoiding splinting, he said.

But residents of the Catalons' village are "very angry" with the "misinformation" in the media.

"There is too much false information aired on TV," said a niece of Mauricio Catalan's. "A news program reported that Adela's brother, who is the barangay captain, also developed the disease when in fact he just accompanied their father to [the RITM]. Then the baby was also reported to have died. That baby is really sickly, and the DOH, thinking that the baby could be [developing] SARS, also took the baby to the hospital. But now the baby is well."

"It is because of the misinformation that people from other places refuse to deal or talk with us, or come near us."

The village residents said they were hurt at being made to feel like lepers.

Most of them also resent the presence of DOH personnel who go around the village to take their temperature "in full costume."

"They have masks, hair protection, and plastic coats on, as if the village is a very dangerous place," said a council member. With a report from Tbnette Orejas, PDI Central Luzon Desk tients suffering from dog bites as well as "dermatology patients." But it is now gearing to isolate them from SARS patients under quarantine there.

In Malacañang, President Macapagal-Arroyo said her administration would raise measures to contain SARS "to a higher level." But she did not say how beyond reiterating an appeal to travelers from SARS-affected countries to "strictly follow the rules of quarantine being imposed by the Department of Health.

The President pledged to keep the public informed about suspected SARS cases and to "thoroughly investigate" all reported or suspected cases. "We shall inform the public and the world of the facts as they emerge," she said in a statement.

Her spokesperson Ignacio Bunye told reporters that screening procedures at the ports of entry had to be tightened.

Bunye described the death of "probable SARS case" Adela Catalan as a cause for "concern."

"Given this current situation,

[the SARS crisis committee has] to come up with ways and means to tighten the entry procedures," he said.

But so far, voluntary quarantine is the main mode to prevent the spread of SARS here, until the DOH says otherwise, Bunye said.

The DOH wants incoming travelers from SARS-affected countries to stay at home for at least seven days to see if they develop the disease's flu-like symptoms. If they do, they have to report to a hospital.

"But I guess the SARS committee itself is constantly reviewing its own procedures," Bunye said.

Transnational effort

The President also explained her reason for attending an emergency Asean leaders' summit on SARS, to be held in Bangkok on April 29.

"The most effective way to defeat this menace is through a transnational effort," she said. "We can see now that no nation can fence itself in from the threat."

She said the leaders would share best practices, common policies and procedures to check SARS across borders.

All 10 leaders of Brunei, Burma, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, Thailand and Vietnam are expected to attend the unprecedented summit.

"Every leader will come," Thai Foreign Minister Surakiat Sathirathai told reporters in Bangkok.

The summit was announced last week by Thailand at Singapore's initiative, and will be chaired by Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen.

China has expressed interest in participating, Surakiat said.

"If China attends, the summit would be separated in two parts—the first part with Asean leaders and then Asean plus China," he said.

A government spokesperson said Sunday that China had not been invited and would merely be informed of the meeting's results.

Five of the 10 Association of Southeast Asian Nations have recorded SARS deaths—Singapore, Vietnam, Thailand, Malaysia and the Philippines.

China, where the mysterious respiratory disease is believed to have originated, has now reported 97 SARS deaths out of 223 worldwide.

Thai Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra has said the summit would determine an Asean position on SARS, and help rebuild shattered business, tourism and investor confidence in Southeast Asia.

'Big risk'

But Cebu Rep. Nenusa Soon-Ruiz, chair of the House subcommittee on public health, warned the President against attending the summit.

"That's a big risk," the congresswoman told reporters. "I don't think it's so important for her to be there personally."

Soon-Ruiz, a physician practicing family medicine, said the President could take part in the summit through teleconferencing.

"It's not really necessary for her to go because we have the wonders of modern technology," she said.

Soon-Ruiz said the President and her party should not take the risk of being a victim or a carrier when the Philippines was still relatively SARS-free.

"You don't know exactly where the virus is," she said. "It is circulating in the air and you could be getting it by shaking hands [with infected persons] and beso-beso [touching cheeks]."

Soon-Ruiz said it was almost inevitable that the disease would break out in the Philippines because of its porous borders and the sheer number of residents going to and from SARS-affected countries.

She said the screening process at the airports was "not perfect," and warned that people intimidated with the prospect of being quarantined might avoid detection.

Transportation Secretary Leonardo Mendoza ordered anew airport and sea port officials to implement stricter measures against SARS.

"We appeal to all passengers to cooperate by filling up the health checklist so that necessary precautionary measures will be undertaken to prevent the spread of the deadly disease," Mendoza said in a statement.

He said he had instructed the Philippine Coast Guard led by Vice Admiral Reuben Lista to be on the lookout for Chinese fishermen who might slip into the country. "It is possible that SARS-infected Chinese nationals could try to enter the country using fishing vessels, so we must also be on guard," he added. Reports from Armand N. Nocum, Dona Z. wedding guests and the priest.

Although she was infected with Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS), the bride had insisted on getting married in a church despite pleas from doctors.

After the ceremony, she was rushed to the hospital to join her brother and mother who were already in an isolation unit. The 25 guests, including four children, were quarantined in separate apartments.

"This should have not happened. I was shocked," Maharashtra state Health Minister Digvijay Khanvilkar told Reuters, adding the couple had rejected appeals from medical officials to delay the wedding.

Doctors believe the bride was infected by her brother, who arrived in India from Indonesia this month. He admitted himself to a hospital in Pune, about 100 km south-east of Bombay, on April 17—four days after he developed symptoms.

On Monday, he was confirmed as a SARS patient. Within hours, his mother and sister (the bride) were also confirmed to have the highly contagious respiratory illness.

The three family members are doing well in the hospital, doctors said.

The groom and the priest have been asked to stay in isolation in their homes.

"We've been keeping the guests under observation in three apartments since last night," Pune Municipal Corp health chief Dr. Anil Raventkar told Reuters. "We've asked them not to step outside and our doctors are keeping a round-the-clock vigil."

He said the guests would stay in quarantine for a week.

The bride, mother and brother brought to four the number of SARS cases in India. Last week, doctors in the western resort state of Goa reported the first SARS case—an engineer who visited Hong Kong and Singapore.

Some doctors have expressed fears SARS could reach epidemic proportions in India—the world's second most populous nation with more than a billion people—due to its congested cities, overstretched health system and media reports of lax airport screening. Reports from Reuters, AP

ALL FILIPINO CUP Phone Pals foil Kings in replay

GAMES TODAY (PhilSports Arena)
5:00 p.m.—Sta. Lucia vs Alaska
7:30 p.m.—San Miguel vs Purefoods

By June Navarro

STOP Asi Taulava and the Talk N Text Phone Pals are bound to collapse.

The Barangay Ginebra Kings stuck to this belief and paid dearly for it, allowing the Phone Pals to escape with a 90-87 victory last night during the replay of their controversial game done exactly a month ago in the Samsung PBA All Filipino Cup at the Araneta Coliseum.

"It's the new system of involving every player on the floor that won the game for us. We looked like a team now unlike before when we used to rely on individual plays," said the 6-foot-9 Taulava.

The Kings limited Taulava to 15 points in an almost no-relief game, far below the Fil-Tongan's 26 points per game average.

What the Kings failed to see was Talk N Text coach Joel Banal's new strategy of moving the ball around on the offensive until it finally hits the open man.

"It's just plain and simple pattern of finding the open man. As long as the players are open, they have the license to shoot," said Banal, whose Phone Pals climbed to 6-5 and moved to solo second behind frontrunner Red Bull in Group B.

In the past, Taulava said the Talk N Text system relied too much on mismatches and one-on-one plays, a design which Banal altered when he took over the coaching chores from American coach Paul Woolpert two weeks ago.

The Kings, who absorbed their eighth defeat in 12 games, also failed to check the towering performance of the 5-foot-9 Jimmy Alapag, who accounted for a third of the Phone Pals point production as the defense collapsed on Taulava most of the time.

"The crowd support that Ginebra gets is really tremendous. Knowing this, I have to really put more intensity on my game," said Alapag, picked 10th overall by the Phone Pals in the rookie draft.

Alapag's paragonia with the Ginebra faithful fetched him wonders as he topscored with 26 points for Talk N Text.

Scores:

TALK N TEXT 90—Alapag 26, Taulava 15, Carey 12, Belano 8, Telan 7, Ravana 6, Loisin 6, Pablo 6, Fran 3, Gonzalez 1

GINEBRA 87—Caguica 26, Limpot 17, David 15, Mank 13, Adducal 5, Tolomia 5, Crisano 4, Dimaunahan 2, Salvacion 0, Johnson 0, Lago 0.

Agojo up by 4 shots

By Jong Arcano

ON a day when the wrong stroke of the pencil got the bid of the Class B top seed to a sorry end, multi-titled Jayvie Agojo and the rest of the big guns bumped into some hostile resistance in yesterday's rain-marred start of the Callaway Junior World qualifying tournament.

Agojo, the fairway princess blossoming into a talent of export quality, survived a gritty stand by Matet Salivio with a one-over-par 73 at the Southwoods Legends course which pushed her four shots ahead in girls Class A of the event serving as the third leg of the Samsung Jungolf Tour.

The Class D action at the Riviera executive course was called off due to rains.

Tonlits Asistio, the Class B favorite, will not be among those teeing off in the second round of the championships today.

Asistio was the clubhouse leader with his 73 only to get disqualified later for signing for a par instead of a bogey on the 15th hole. Asistio's disqualification elevated Miko Yee and Mikee Camarot as joint leaders, up by five over three others.

Spurs tie series; Kings win again

SAN ANTONIO—San Antonio didn't stop Stephon Marbury, but the Spurs did make their free throws down the stretch Monday, taking an 84-76 victory over Phoenix to even their NBA playoff series at one game each.

Two days after the Spurs missed six of their eight free throws in overtime and fell to the Suns in Game 1, Tim Duncan scored half of his 22 points in the fourth quarter. He helped San Antonio battle back from a seven-point deficit in the period.

The series switches to Phoenix for games on Friday and Sunday (Saturday and Monday, respectively in Manila).

With the Spurs leading 77-76, Manu Ginobili made a 3-pointer from the wing with 1:02 remaining.

Marbury, the hero of Game 1 with a running 3-point bank shot in overtime, missed a drive to the basket on the next possession.

San Antonio then clinched the victory by making all four of its foul shots in the final minute.

NBA All-Star Gary Payton, Sam Cassell and the Milwaukee Bucks try to overcome controversy and a 0-1 series deficit when they face the New Jersey Nets in Game Two of their first-round NBA playoffs series today (April 23), live at 7 a.m. on Solar Sports. Replay will be at 8 p.m.

In Indianapolis, Reggie Miller came off the bench in the final minutes to drill a 3-pointer as Indiana beat Boston 89-77 and even the Eastern Conference playoff series 1-1.

In Sacramento, California, Peja Stojakovic scored 29 points, and Vlade Divac had 15 points and seven rebounds as Sacramento beat Utah 108-95 to take a 2-0 lead in their first-round series.

Playing the aggressive, high-scoring style that put them among the NBA's elite, the Kings took a 25-point lead early in the fourth period—and they did it mostly without leading scorer and rebounder Chris Webber, who went to the locker room early in the second quarter with a strained lower back. AP

John-O shines

LONG-RANGE shooting lifted John-O to an 83-74 victory over LBC-Batangas yesterday in the Sunkist-PBL 2003 Unity Cup at the Pasig Sports Center.

Mark Macapagal drilled in two triples and Celino Cruz one as John-O repulsed LBC-Batangas' fiery rally with a 13-2 blast late in the third quarter.

Macapagal wound up with 20 points, highlighted by four triples, and eight rebounds to power John-O to its fifth win against two losses and the top spot in the NCR Division.

Ricky Calmag added 15 points while Cruz added 14 for John-O.

LBC Batangas, despite drawing a game-high 22 points from Alex Compton, fell to 3-5 in the Luzon Division.

Hapee Toothpaste subdued ICTSI, 80-71, in the second game to keep the solo lead with a 6-1 slate. ICTSI dropped to 3-4. Roy Luarca

Bigger Tour edition eyed next year

By Roy Luarca

TOUR Pilipinas hasn't even begun, but already its organizers are looking forward to a bigger edition next year.

Bert Lina, Tour Pilipinas chair and owner of the sponsoring Airfreight 2100, bared his plan to include Visayas and Mindanao in the bikefest itinerary when he guested in yesterday's PSA Forum at the Manila Pavilion Hotel.

After a four-year hiatus, Tour Pilipinas is getting back on the road again this Saturday in Legaspi City with Lina promising a thrilling 15-lap, 18-day cycling spectacle.

"We're happy that we're able to bring the Tour back. Expect an exciting summer for our cyclists," said Lina, who was accompanied by race manager Paquito Rivas.

The revival of the Tour, considered as the country's biggest sports event every summer until it encountered sponsorship problems in 1998, caught the interests of many including Philippine Sports Commission chair Eric Buhan. Buhan, who also guested in the same forum, called Lina "a sports hero of the new generation."

Lina got an additional surprise when the sportswriters who attended the session sponsored by Agfa Colors, Red Bull and Pagcor presented him a cake as a gift a day before he turns 55.

Lina said he'll be joining the Tour, staged at the cost of around P32 to P40 million, majority of the way, with the caravan set to leave for the Bacol region tomorrow at dawn.

Villamayor tames rival, keeps chess lead

DILG Multi-Purpose Hall, A. Francisco Gold Condominium II, Erisa, Quezon City.

Villamayor, the only unbeaten player in the 12-man field, raised his total to 10.5 points, one up on GM Eugene Torre who has 9.5.

Continuing his recovery, Torre downed IM Barlo Nadera, moving ahead of GM Joey Antonio, who was at 9 points following a draw with NM Ronald Dableo.

With six wins and nine draws, Villamayor said he needs to win at least 50 percent of the last seven games to make the national team to the Vietnam Southeast Asian Games rapid chess category.

PBA should revert to old format

I HESITATE to point out the obvious, but the Philippine Basketball Association has suddenly become a league where winning is practically meaningless.

For instance, in the ongoing PBA All Filipino Cup, all the teams that will make it into the quarterfinal round will be starting from scratch, meaning that their win-loss record in this elimination series will not count in the quarters. This is unfair to the frontrunners. Why? Because these top teams could fall flat on their faces by losing in the next round to the lowest-placed teams.

And I agree with the diehards, including straight-forward Yeng Guiao, coach of pacesetter Batang Red Bull (10-1), who said that the format of the All Filipino Cup does not reward teams that play well.

CLEAN LIVING

"There is no incentive for the top teams," said the 42-year-old Guiao, who piloted the Photokina franchise of much admired George Chua to back-to-back PBA Commissioner's Cup championships in 2001-2002. The present format, he added, is favorable to weak teams and doesn't reward the teams that perform well.

With their league-best 10-1 slate, Batang Red Bull is already assured of a slot in the quarterfinals. "We may lose one or two games along the way, but so far, we're playing the best basketball among the other teams," Guiao said. Still, he isn't taking the others lightly. "Even if the pressure of making it into the next round is gone, we're now trying other means to further strengthen the team. It's back to work after the long holidays."

MMDA acts to keep Metro clean

DOING HIS SHARE

The task may difficult, but this boy shows what everyone can do to make the environment clean and livable. The clean-up job on an estero along Quirino Avenue in Manila was part of the observance yesterday of Earth Day.

By Leila B. Salaverria

STUNG by the dust and grime in the metropolis, the Metro Manila Development Authority will resort to the basic ingredient to keep the region clean—water.

A truck spraying high-pressure jets of water will do the rounds of the metropolis in the early morning hours, blasting overpasses and flyovers with water to keep them spanking clean.

Traffic Operations Center Director Angelito Vergel de Dios said the MMDA had recently acquired a truck washer, which has power nozzles on all sides that can spray high-pressure jets of water.

The truck works like the water hoses used by firemen to put out fires and by police to drive away protesters.

Vergel de Dios said the powerful blasts of water are expected to wash out the grime in the overpasses and underbellies of flyovers, remnants of posters on the walls and the dust, dirt and litter that accumulate on the sidewalks.

MMDA General Robert Nacianceno explained that using the truck washer would be more efficient in keeping the metropolis clean than manual labor which would take too much time considering how fast the city gets dirty.

"Metro Manila is a dusty city," Nacianceno said.

He added that the MMDA is already looking for a cheap source of water that can be used for the truck cleaner.

Aside from keeping Metro Manila clean, the truck washer is expected to help stave off pollution caused by the dust, said Nacianceno.

When all the dirt has been washed down, street sweeper machines with vacuum hoses would take over and remove all of the residue that have accumulated on the ground.

The MMDA will initially test the effectivity of the new truck cleaner along EDSA before deploying it throughout the metropolis.

The truck will also see action during lean traffic hours to avoid causing traffic build-up. Nacianceno said the newly acquired truck cleaner and four street sweeper machines are expected to complement the work of the clean-up teams of the MMDA.

Meanwhile, Muntinlupa City Mayor Jaime Fresnedi leads today the highlight of the month-long Earth Day event which is the clean-up of the city's eight rivers and tributaries.

Lake Management Office head Rodolfo Oliguino said Natural Resources Secretary Elisea Gozon will join Fresnedi in the planting of about 70 pieces of bamboo trees along the Alabang river.

Privatization of Bilibid compound opposed

By Christian V. Esguerra

THE PRIVATIZATION of the New Bilibid Prisons compound will not only displace about 3,000 people but also uproot hundreds of trees and destroy several historical sites in Muntinlupa, according to the residents.

"We have everything to lose if the President will not listen to us," Lydia Basanta, president of the NBP Teachers' Organization, said in an interview.

The sprawling property is a "wealth of history," housing the Bagong Anyo Park, the Director's quarters, a sunken garden (formerly a golf course), a grotto, a pond, and a number of historical sites including an anti-aircraft cannon used by the Japanese in World War II, Basanta said.

She said residents have been preserving these sites, including hundreds of trees, since the compound was established in 1935.

But with the government's recent announcement that it would privatize the property to generate more income, residents are now caught in a struggle not only to preserve the area's heritage but also their homes.

Basanta fears that she and her neighbors would be driven away once the area is sold to the private sector.

She admitted that they have only rights, not titles, to the land in which their houses had been built. The land was awarded to them by their former employers in government.

Most of the residents have been living at the compound for more than 50 years and had worked at the penitentiary and other government offices.

Some teach at the Muntinlupa Polytechnic College, Muntinlupa National High School, and Itas Elementary School which might also be displaced by the privatization, Basanta said.

Oil depot controversy rages, permit ends April 30 Kidnappers release ma, 2-year-old son

By Jerome Anining, Christian V. Esguerra and Anne Luisa E. Villarico

PACIFICO EUGENIO has been a resident of Barangay 834 in Pandacan, Manila for almost 78 years now, and is on his third term as Barangay Kagawad.

For 36 years, Eugenio was also an employee of one of the oil companies in the Pandacan oil depot. Eighteen years after his retirement from the oil firm, Eugenio has remained loyal to the company, which he said had helped him send his six children to school.

Eugenio is one of the many residents of Pandacan who are opposing the closure of the oil facility.

"The oil depot has to stay," he said. "It has brought many opportunities to the residents here."

Dismissing criticism that the oil facility poses a danger to the residents, Eugenio said: "I would not have reached the age of 70 if the depot has posed a threat to my health."

But about 150 militants and Pandacan residents yesterday demanded that the City Council preserve Manila Ordinance No. 8027, which calls for the closure of the oil facility after the part of Pandacan where the depot is located has been rezoned from an industrial to a commercial/residential area.

The United Front to Oust the Oil Depot warned that "killing" the ordinance "would be tantamount to killing Pandacan residents" who continue to live near the facility, which the councilors themselves have regarded as a fire hazard and potential terrorist target.

But Caltex executive Marian Catedral said in yesterday's Bulong Pulungan forum at the Western Philippine Plaza that the City Council would have to shoulder the blame for massive fuel shortage, higher fuel cost and the breakdown of services of airports and seaports if the depot is forced to shut down.

"If the permit is not renewed, we will be forced to shut down," she said. "We cannot operate illegally."

Last January, the city council granted a three-month permit for the Pandacan oil depot to operate despite the ordinance.

Catedral said that if the permit is not renewed, the public should be ready for long queues at gas stations and the "slowdown in economic activity." She also warned that the situation would be worse than the 1973 oil crisis.

In a report, Caltex, Petron, and Shell claimed that the fuel supply in Metro Manila would be cut by about 50 percent if the depot were closed because the companies' pipeline would no longer be available.

Petroleum products would then have to be transported daily by thousands of tank trucks from their refinery facilities in Batangas and Bataan, Catedral said.

More than half of the 459 service stations in Metro Manila would also be forced to shut down, jeopardizing the operations of the Ninoy Aquino International Airport and the Manila Port, according to the report.

Blancino Bujatin, Chair of Barangay 834 said that the people opposing the continued stay of the depot are not residents of Pandacan.

"If there were any problems posed by the depot, we (barangay officials) should be the first one to complain about it," he said.

Bar Austria, also a barangay kagawad said the local oil companies even help the community in its infrastructure projects.

"The oil companies are not just concerned with their business interests, they have also provided scholarships, supported various social projects for the people," Austria said.

But environmentalist Tina Testa said the real enemy is not City Hall but the "Big Three"—referring to the oil companies—that, she said, "are trying hard to buy and manipulate" the people involved in the controversy.

Testa urged city officials to listen and uphold the security concerns of Pandacan residents, saying, "Since the mayor is much involved in making Manila live again, the Council should not kill the city by scrapping the ordinance."

Yesterday's Council session adjourned early due to lack of a quorum, but the protesters' noise barrage partly disrupted Mayor Lito Aojena's welcome rites for the visiting Russian ambassador at City Hall's inner courtyard.

Kidnappers release ma, 2-year-old son

By Philip C. Tubeza

A MOTHER and her two-year-old son who were supposedly kidnapped along with the woman's female Korean cousin inside a Makati mall last April 12 were released unharmed by their captors last Sunday, according to Manila police.

The victims, natives of Pangasinan, were released at the Pedro Gil LRT station in Ermita, Manila, but the Korean is still with the kidnappers, said a police investigator. He said that the 24-year-old mother and her son were unharmed and were fed adequately during their captivity, but their abductors had taken the woman's money worth P6,000.

The woman told police that they were kidnapped because her cousin had just received a very large inheritance.

She said the kidnappers had threatened to kill her if she reported to police the kidnapping.

But the woman's brother who was in contact with his sister through her cell phone, had reported the abduction to police.

Police said they were informed that the victims would be released at the LRT station at about 5 p.m. last Sunday, but it turned out that the kidnappers had left them there as early as 1 p.m.

The woman told police that she could not remember the name of the mall where the kidnapping occurred since she had just arrived in Manila. She said she had come to Manila to ask her cousin for some money after the Korean received her inheritance.

About 10 armed men abducted them while they were inside the mall and then taken to a safe house in Parañaque, the woman said. She said she heard their kidnappers saying that they were in Parañaque.

The woman said that after seven days in captivity, the kidnappers had told her that she and her son would be released, but they did not say anything about her cousin. She then sent a text message to her brother, who in turn informed the police.

Joey Marquez asks court to junk case barring him from movies, TV shows

By Jerome Anining

PARAÑAQUE Mayor Joey Marquez has asked a Manila judge to dismiss a lawsuit seeking to bar artists elected to public office from appearing in movies and television shows.

The Social Justice Society, a small political party composed mostly of lawyers, has filed the case against Marquez and other show biz personalities who have been elected as public officials.

Marquez said his "very splendid career" as mayor is due to his performance as a local executive and not to his popularity as an actor.

He said his performance "must have been outstanding and certainly one that is highly commendable," because he was voted mayor three consecutive times.

To say that he was elected because he is popular "would be considered an insult or attack on the wisdom and integrity of (my) constituents," Marquez added.

He said many artists also ran for elective posts but lost.

He said that the SJS case poses a challenge to his right to freedom of expression. Such freedom includes freedom to film, produce and exhibit motion pictures in theaters and television, he explained.

To prohibit someone from exercising his profession as an actor merely because he is also an elected official would constitute prior and direct restraint upon his exercise of the freedom of speech and expression, Marquez argued.

"For one who is qualified, the pursuit of a business, occupation or profession (such as being) an actor, is a right, and not a matter of the state's grace or favor, or privilege subject to withdrawal or denial at the whim of the state," he said.

Such a right "may not be taken away or impaired unless there is a paramount and compelling public interest."

Aside from Marquez, other respondents in the case are Mayor Vilma Santos of Lipa City and Pampanga Gov. Lito Lapid.

Both have also asked for the dismissal of the case, which is being heard by Manila Regional Trial Court Branch 14 Judge Cesar Solis.

SUPREME COURT DOCTRINES

REMEDIAL LAW (CRIMINAL PROCEDURE)—Stipulation of facts—The acceptability of stipulating facts has long been established in our jurisprudence. In a case involving illegal possession of firearms, the prosecution and the defense stipulated the fact that the accused had been found in possession of a gun without the required permit or license. In People v. Bocar, the Court considered as valid the admission by the accused of the existence of certain affidavits and exhibits, which the prosecution had presented to dispense with oral testimonies on the matter contained therein. In People v. Hernandez, which involved illegal recruitment, the Court upheld the joint stipulation that the accused had not been licensed or authorized by the Philippine Overseas Employment Agency to recruit workers for overseas jobs. There is nothing irregular or unlawful in stipulating facts in criminal cases. The policy encouraging it is consistent with the doctrine of waiver, which recognizes that "x x x everyone has a right to waive and agree to waive the advantage of a law or rule made solely for the benefit and protection of the individual in his private capacity, if it can be dispensed with and relinquished without infringing on any public right and without detriment to the community at large." In the present case, the Joint Stipulation made by the prosecution and petitioners was a waiver of the right to present evidence on the facts and the documents freely admitted by them. There could have been no impairment of petitioners' right to be presumed innocent, right to due process or right against self-incrimination because the waiver was voluntary, made with the assistance of counsel and is sanctioned by the Rules on Criminal Procedure. On Earth Day, a park's fate hangs in the balance

By Jerome Anling

ONE SIDE aims to conserve the Arroceros Park in Manila, the other hopes to improve it.

Although park conservationist Winner Foundation Inc. and the Manila City Hall do not see eye to eye, both claim they have the best interests of the park at heart.

Winner President Regina Rocco-Paterno said they hope that the park will serve its educational purpose by being an outdoor classroom-laboratory, where students may visit and study the trees and other plants.

On the other hand, Manila Mayor Lito Atienza has said that he is "bent on converting the park into a botanical garden for the people, come what may."

The issue has led to a bitter squabble that has now reached the sala of Manila judge Marivic Balisi-Umali.

Today, an uneasy truce exists between the two camps.

A source at the Manila City Hall said Vice Mayor Danilo Lacuna was able to convince Winner members and city hall officials to "cool it off" and work on the development of the park under "mutually agreeable terms" while waiting for the judge to resolve the case in court.

Meanwhile, the Winner group yesterday said that they hope to celebrate Earth Day at the park, which is located just off Quezon Bridge by the Pasig River, on April 26.

Banyans

In the park, about 150 large trees, among them century-old Indian rubber and banyan

DENCIO, caretaker of the Arroceros Forest Park, enjoys a tree-lined sunset in the heart of Manila.

(balete) trees, soar side by side with more than 3,500 other trees, some full-grown, others mere saplings.

Hardwood and fruit trees have formed a natural canopy that provides a cool shade to visitors. Dead leaves and branches fall freely and pile up on the ground, turning into a natural forest floor that is strengthened by grass, ferns, shrubs, bushes and other smaller plants which prevent the land from being eroded by floods and the Pasig River's waters.

The park is maintained and guarded 24-hours a day by its resident caretaker, Denicio, who lives with his family in a small hut on the northeast corner of the place.

Dencio waters the seedlings, tends the compost pit, wards off vandals and vagrants, and welcomes visitors, acting as a tour guide when he is not too busy.

Paterno said Winner hopes to raise enough money in the next few years to put up a plant and souvenir shop, an open-air auditorium, public comfort rooms, more benches, some lights, picnic tables, campsites for boy and girl scouts, a cafe for theater goers, hanging bridges and tree houses, pathways and a lagoon.

The park, which was closed two months ago due to controversy, has again opened to the public.

Winner said the place is now open daily, from 8 a.m. to 5 a.m. except on Mondays for "nature treks and science excursions."

For 2003, Paterno added, there will be more planting of secondary trees, particularly those that thrive in the shade.

She said the problem of flooding during the rainy season also has to be resolved.

"Floods have destroyed some of the nurse trees," the Winner president explained. "We will consult some agriculturists for possible solutions. As soon as the flooding is controlled, more ground cover can be planted."

Walkway

A portion of the park near the river has become part of the Pasig River Rehabilitation Commission, and environment and tourism departments.

The commission has completed its construction of the boardwalk, a project funded by the Asian Development Bank, early this month.

The boardwalk—tree-lined, paved linear park—is spaced about 10 meters from either side of the river.

Winner members as well as volunteers from the business and educational sectors continue to care for and guard the forest. Paterno said the park is not yet a full-pledge forest.

Following the master plan for the mini-forest made by landscape architect Wilfredo Dixon, the Manila Seeding bank delivered the 3,500 saplings to the park, maintaining the plants for a year before turning them over to Winner.

A group of bird watchers from the Haribon Foundation for the Protection of Natural Resources actually wants construction and human activity minimized in the park so as not to scare away the birds that have made the forest their home.

The bird enthusiasts found six species of birds living in the forest park. They are the long-tailed shrike, brown shrike, zebra dove, pacific swallow, yellow-vested bulbul and pied fantail.

Paterno said she hopes that by opening the forest and providing educational tours and lectures, people will learn to love and care for the environment.

No epidemic, says Philracom

NOT TO worry, assures the Philippine Racing Commission. It was pure coincidence, it says, that their report on record earnings came on the heels of multiple race horse deaths following the April Fool's opening of the San Lorenzo Leisure Park in Carmona, Cavite. There's no epidemic of greed and irresponsibility in the local horse racing industry, swears the Philracom. Chair whose letter we print here:

Dear Mr. Trinidad:

We are greatly concerned that your recent column referred to the Philracom as being involved in a deliberate cover-up of the real issues by simultaneously coming out with a recent report about the positive developments in the local horse racing industry.

The Philracom is not in any way involved in any damage control or cover-up as was alleged. The Philracom statement only emphasized that the Philracom was on top of the situation and that efforts have already been exerted to preserve the integrity of the sport and strictly regulate the conduct of its direct players, including the two race clubs.

The Philracom has been taking an active part in supervising the many changes that have taken place in the industry over the past few months, notably the transfer of Manila Jockey Club's racing operation from Manila to Carmona.

We believe that such a significant development should require our strict attention considering that it would have a tremendous impact on the lives of thousands of direct industry players, whose livelihood depend on the sport, as well as the government, which derives a substantial amount of revenue income from the industry's operation.

The Philracom has outlined a 14-point checklist of essential requirements to be set up at the new racing complex which would serve as a precondition to the grant of a temporary permit allowing MJCI to commence horse racing activities at the SLLP. In turn, the Philracom has conducted a series of exhaustive and meticulous on-site inspections on the new complex to ensure that the said essential requirements have already been put in place at the SLLP.

Following the conduct of the said inspections, the latest being held last March 28, the 7-man Philracom Board was finally convinced of MJCI's compliance and thereafter unanimously decided to finally grant MJCI the temporary permit to conduct horse racing activities at the SLLP starting April 1, 2003. Since then, MJCI has been able to successfully conduct 10 other race meetings at the SLLP.

BARE EYE

Although we admit that certain problems have indeed cropped up as a result of MJCI's transfer of racing operation to Carmona, we maintain that all of these are still manageable and could only be expected as part of any pioneering venture.

We note with grave concern, however, the deliberate attempt of certain quarters to exaggerate on certain issues like the supposed growing number of horse fatalities and the alleged poor and dangerous racing surface at the SLLP.

We would like to inform you that prior to the start of any race meeting, a group of representatives from the Philracom, the concerned race club and the various sectors regularly conduct inspections on the actual racing surface to determine whether it is fit and safe for racing. No race meeting is ever conducted without the said certification and the Philracom will never allow the continued conduct of racing activities without such a guarantee.

As in any other part of the horse racing world, accidents are very much a part of this highly competitive sport. Such incidents or mishaps can happen in spite of all the precautions taken by the Philracom and the race club concerned and such is an accepted reality in horse racing. Just the same, we will also conduct further investigation on such matters in the interest of establishing the real cause of the reported incidents.

We would like to clarify however, the erroneous report about the alleged death of two more horses at the SLLP last Wednesday, April 16, 2003. The trainer of one of the said horse, Shuning Pyramid, recently informed the Commission that the said horse did not die but only suffered an injury on its off fore after running in the third race.

In closing, we would like to seek your support and assistance in clarifying the real situation in the local horse racing industry. Although we admit that we are still a long way from achieving the desired and ideal situation, we are doing our best to help the local horse racing industry realize its full potential.

Jaime A. Dilag
Chairman, Philracom

METROBRIEFS

Snatchers nabbed

JOSEPH Gaspar, 29, and Dennis Nomasanta, 22, have been arrested for allegedly stealing the necklace of Maria Vena in Makati City Monday morning. Vena told police that while she was waiting for a passenger bus on Edsa in Guadalupe, the suspects came up from behind her, grabbed her necklace and fled toward the Laperal compound. Barangay watchmen noticed the commotion and ran after the suspects. The watchmen recovered the necklace and turned over the suspects to the Makati Police. Marina Kristina

Shooter beaten up

EDGARDO Bataan was beaten up by angry bystanders after he allegedly shot Jacobo Magdalayo in Quezon City Sunday night. Bataan, 32, of Barangay Commonwealth, Quezon City, is now being treated at the East Avenue Medical Center. PO1 Joseph Medina of the Central Police District said the suspect was high on drugs when he started playing with a .38-caliber revolver out in the street near his house at around 12:30 p.m. Magdalayo, 73, happened to pass by and the suspect shot him in the foot. When the victim cried for help from bystanders, the latter chased the suspect and mauled him until barangay watchmen arrived and took the suspect in custody. Alcun Papa

Body fished out

ANOTHER dead man was fished out of Manila Bay on Sunday night. But unlike the other recovered bodies, whom police believed were "salvage victims," the man found was said to have drowned after two men chased him into the bay. The unidentified man was described as 30 to 35 years old, slim, and clad only in black denim shorts, said Detective Virgo Villara. Police said the victim was drunk when he ran amuck at the skating rink beside the Quirino Grandstand early that evening. The man allegedly ran away and jumped into the bay when two bystanders tried to pacify him. Villara said Philippine Coast Guard officers saw the body floating off the PCG headquarters at Manila's South Harbor at around 10:30 p.m. Philip Tubasa

Tourist robbed

JAPANESE tourist Ichikawa Hiroshi on Monday told police that he was robbed at the Plaza Raja Sulayman in Malate, Manila on Easter Sunday. But the police are doubting Hiroshi's complaint, saying that there were too many lawmen in the area for the robbery to have happened. They said the victim might only be after the insurance money which he would come to collect in Japan. Hiroshi, 45, currently staying at the Dakota Mansion, told police that he was walking near the Aristocrat restaurant at around 9:30 p.m. when a man snatched his Louis Vuitton bag containing his valuables worth P125,000, said PO3 Delfin Silva. Hiroshi said the suspect was around 33 years old and stood at about 5-foot-4. Philip Tubasa

Velasco: Slain men were criminals

By Alcun Papa

THEY were really criminals.

This was how Deputy Director General Reynaldo Velasco described the five men who were killed in Sunday's shootout with the Quezon City police.

A professor of the University of the Philippines yesterday also identified the slain suspects as the same men who burglarized his home last month.

Erwin Alampay, 32, a professor of the UP College of Public Administration and resident of Alpha Village, Quezon City, yesterday told members of the Central Police District Criminal Investigation Unit that one of the five suspects killed in Sunday's encounter, forcibly entered his house on March 20, hogged him and his family, and took their cell phones, jewelry and cash.

Police said brothers Sergio, Eufemio, Edward and Florencio Pitulan, and Augusto Torres, were killed in a shootout in Barangay Bahay Toro, Quezon City last Sunday. A sixth man, Glicerio Pitulan, has been arrested. PO1 Aldie Monteroso was also killed in the gun battle.

Velasco, chief of the National Capital Region Police Office, revealed that the group that engaged Quezon City policemen in a shootout were members of a robbery gang that operates in Metro Manila and adjacent provinces.

Octave of Easter

1st Reading: Acts 3:1-10
Gospel: Lk 24:13-35

Two disciples of Jesus were going to Emmaus, a village seven miles from Jerusalem, and they talked about what had happened. While they were talking and wondering, Jesus came up and walked with them, but their eyes were held and they did not recognize him.

He asked, "What is this you are talking about?" The two stood still, looking sad. Then one named Cleopas answered, "Why, it seems you are the only traveler in Jerusalem who doesn't know what has happened there these past few days." And he asked, "What is it?"

They replied, "It is about Jesus of Nazareth. He was a prophet, you know, mighty in word and deed before God and the people. But the chief priests and our rulers sentenced him to death. They handed him over to be crucified. We had hoped that he would redeem Israel."

It is now the third day since all this took place. It is true that some women of our group have disturbed us. When they went to the tomb at dawn, they did not find his body, they came to tell us that they had seen a vision of angels who told them that Jesus was alive. Some friends of our group went to the tomb and found everything just as the women had said, but they did not see him."

He said to them, "How dull you are, how slow of understanding! You fail to believe the message of the prophets. Is it not written that the Christ should suffer all this and then enter his glory?" Then starting with Moses and going through the prophets, he explained to them everything in the Scriptures concerning himself.

As they drew near the village they were heading for, Jesus made as if to go farther. But they prevailed upon him, "Stay with us, for night comes quickly. The day is now almost over." So he went in to stay with them. When they were at table, he took the bread, said a blessing, broke it and gave each a piece (...)

Then their eyes were opened, and they recognized him, but he vanished out of their sight. And they said to each other, "Were not our hearts filled with ardent yearning when he was talking to us on the road and explaining the Scriptures?"

They immediately set out and returned to Jerusalem. There they found the Eleven and their companions gathered together. They were greeted by these words: "Yes, it is true, the Lord is risen! He has appeared to Simon." Then the two told what had happened on the road and how Jesus made himself known when he broke bread with them.

Commentary

His disciples followed Jesus to Jerusalem believing that he would accomplish something great. After his death, Cleopas and another disciple, walked away from that city disillusioned. They could recount the story of Jesus accurately. They knew of the reports about his resurrection. But still, they could not make sense about it all. Then they encountered the Risen Jesus. At first, they mistook him for an ignorant stranger. Jesus explained the Scriptures to them and they were so enthused that they invited him to stay with them. He obliged. He broke bread with them. He vanished. But they had recognized him: The Risen Lord is present when the Scriptures are proclaimed do our hearts burn? He is there when bread is broken... do we recognize him? Do we pray that he stay with us?

SARS scare sends stars to Boracay

WITH Hong Kong scratched from show biz people's lists of favorite destinations during Holy Week because of the dreaded SARS (Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome), Boracay became the most popular alternative, and it was definitely not a bad choice.

Eyewitnesses say show biz couples, babes and hunks littered the shore of the resort island.

Bong Revilla Jr. was there with his whole family. Wife Lani Mercado was a head-turner on the beach in her one-piece swimsuit, while their son Jolo attracted his share of attention.

Show biz sweethearts Claudine Barretto and Raymart Santiago weren't h.d.ing anymore, although they preferred not to mingle with the beach crowd.

A foursome were Rachel Alejandro and Lee Robin Salazar, and Geneva Cruz and KC Montero. KC played surrogate dad to Geneva's son (with former Intru-yos band member Paco Arespa-cochaga) Heaven.

Hans Montenegro and Maritoni Fernandez were a coo-some two-some. So were Michael de Mesa and his pretty girlfriend, Julie.

Sunshine Dixon and Mikko Sotto held hands while walking on the beach.

Young singer/TV host Champagne Morales dauntlessly donned a bikini, to the delight of paparazzi and oglers. Her mom Dinah Dominguez was nowhere in sight.

Lucky Manzano displayed his buffed "Human" bod. So did the good-looking Turvey twins Brad and Greg.

Cogie Domingo enjoyed water surfing, while ex-Power Boy Geoff Rodriguez and Power Boy Greg Martin got their tan.

With Anne Curtis on the beach, could boyfriend Oyo Boy Sotto be far behind? Oyo Boy, however, was accompanied by his p.d.er sister, Danica, who was a sexy figure on the beach, too.

Also spotted on the island was PBA's Red Bull prized cager Vince Hizon. But where was his la-bylove, Patricia Bermudez?

Dino Guevarra was with his live-in partner Kim de los Santos, who, with her heavy figure, did not frolic on the beach. Kim gained weight when she got pregnant with her love child with Dino and she has not regained her former shape.

Others who enjoyed the water, sand and sun were Eula Valdez, Kristine Hermosa, Vandalolph Quizon, JM Rodriguez, Dale Villar, Willie Revillame and Keem-pee de Leon.

Designer Frederick Perahta was by his lonesome, but he was never wanting for somebody to chat with whether on the beach or in any happening place on the island.

The Bernal touch

THE FIRST time I watched a Joyce Bernal flick, "Dahil May Isang Ikaw," with Aga Muhlach and Regine Velasquez, I was thrilled and entertained by the light and charming romance-drama that had touches of comedy.

Bernal scored box-office hits with other movies like "Kailangan Ko'y Ikaw" with Robin Padilla and Regine, "Pagdating ng Panahon" with Sharon Cuneta and Robin, and "Pangako, Ikaw Lang" with Aga and Regine again. She also displayed her directing flair in the comedy "Booba" with Rufa Mae Quinto and the action-drama "Buhay Kaman," which starred Robin.

Bernal is back with her latest work, "Till There Was You," starring Piolo Pascual and Judy Ann Santos. Opening on April 30, it is Bernal's first for Star Cinema.

Judy Ann is Joanna, a carefree girl who agrees to play surrogate mom to Piolo's daughter, although he is not her boyfriend. Piolo plays a lawyer who has a child from a one-night stand woman he doesn't love.

Judy Ann and Piolo have a love scene that reportedly made Judy Ann blush after the take.

Moroccan-inspired

SEXY stars Jenny Rosenthal and Kristine Jaca will model Tabú Swimwear in a fashion show, "Moroccan Dusk," tonight at Dish, 3rd Level of Rockwell's Power Plant Mall.

The Moroccan-inspired fashion show will also feature Tanya Paulsen, Phoenela Baranda, Nicolette Bell and Kyla Fernandez.

The show is produced by PEG Inc. and is presented by Nivea.

Marc Nelson and Marco Lobregat will do bartending chores after the fashion show.

Tickets are at P350 for men, while women can get in free. Call Dish at 898-1771 or 898-1824. Doors open at 9 p.m.

Lead again

EMILIO Garcia has had his beyday playing villain roles both in movies and on TV in the forthcoming sex-drama flick, "Punla," he is in a lead role again, this time opposite controversial sexy star Tracy Torres.

Emilio has starred in money-making sex-dramas with .op sexy stars like Rosanna Roces. But he says, "I want to be known as a versatile actor."

In "Punla," he plays devoted husband to Tracy but he can't give her a child. She goes looking for another man who can give her a baby.

Emilio calls Tracy "gutsy."

On TV, Emilio has just ended his stint in ABS-CBN's top-rating soap, "Bituin," where he played a man torn between Jessa Zaragoza and Cherie Gil. He is set to start a new series soon.

"Punla," which opens April 23, also stars John Apacible and newcomer Eric Parilla.

"KILIG" FACTOR: Piolo Pascual and Judy Ann Santos pour on the syrup in Joyce Bernal's "Till There Was You."

COUPLE Albert and Liezl Martinez had a good laugh watching the one man comedy act of Rex Navarrete last April 10 at the popular Dish outlet of the Power Plant Mall of Rockwell.

Did You Know...

Albert said their three children—Alyanna, Alfonso and Alyssandra—were bored at home and wanted to go with them to the show.

But Rex had jokes for an adult audience, so the kids had no choice but to stay home.

HOST: What are you doing to make sure that there will be no terrorist attacks during this Holy Week season?

Guest: We are concentrating our security measures in airports, piers and bus terminals.

Host: In what way, specifically?

Guest: Well, for one, sa lahat ng bapor ngayon, may nagkalat na iba't-ibang klase ng mga canine dogs.

Host: What about SARS? What should be the public's right attitude about it?

Guest: Don't be too paranoidly afraid!

Host: How did you feel when you didn't win the award this year?

Guest: Honestly, I'm a frustrated!

Host: Many people are hitting you these days, but you still look cheerful. What's your secret?

Guest: Simple. Despite all of what been saying against me, I don't listen to negatives, I just lis-

DID YOU KNOW...

REGINE Velasquez and Johina Magdangal watched the recent "Crossover Presents" show of comedian Rex Navarette at the Mandarin Oriental, but the two stars hardly laughed.

Erap downfall not part of Chavit movie

By Frank Cimatu and Leoncio Balbin Jr.
PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

VIGAN CITY — The movie about the man whose "juetengate" exposé led to the downfall of former President Joseph Estrada will not include the toppling of the former actor.

This early, however, there are already plans for a follow-up to "Chavit of Ilocos," the movie based on the life of Luis "Chavit" Singson.

The political kingpin of Ilocos Sur just laughed when asked if the movie would have "ST" scenes. He said he insisted on including in the movie all the six ambush attempts on his life, in the late 1960s and early 1970s, which is why the movie would not cover his role in toppling his erstwhile friend, former President Estrada.

The Chavit biopic will not have "ST" ("sexually titillating") scenes, Singson himself said.

He is not even particular about who will play him (action star Cesar Montano, who once played national hero Jose Rizal) or his wife (reportedly dramatic actress Dina Bonnevie). If he's exacting about anything at all regarding the movie, which will start shooting here next month, it is that it would be "ST" or "simply true."

"It will be a true-to-life story and I will make sure that everything in the movie is true," he said. "No scenes would be added. We should stick to the truth."

Singson said he chose Carlo J. Caparas, known for his massacre and other sensational movies, to direct his biopic not because he wants to hype his life story but because Caparas has been bugging him all these years.

"Many producers had been proposing to make my movie but he was the most persistent," Singson said.

The former Ilocos Sur governor said the movie would cost P50 million, although he is silent on who would finance it.

Singson said the most serious attempt on his life was made in 1972 in Cagayan town where two grenades were thrown while he was attending a party.

"More than 500 people were hurt," he recalled. "When I went to the hospital, you could literally see blood flowing all over."

"Chavit of Ilocos" will tell of his life in Vigan from boyhood until he became an embalmer and eventually the town's police chief.

Singson first ventured into politics in 1967 when he was elected councilor of Vigan. In 1969, he decided to challenge his uncle, Ilocos Sur Rep. Floro Crisologo, who was then the acknowledged political kingpin in the province, but Singson lost.

Crisologo was assassinated while praying at the St. Paul Cathedral in Vigan in 1970.

Singson ran for governor in 1971 and beat his aunt, the incumbent Gov. Carmelina Crisologo, Floro's widow. Singson became the new boss of Ilocos Sur politics.

By Doris C. Dumlaog

THE GOVERNMENT yesterday said its budget deficit in the first three months of the year reached P58.9 billion, exceeding its target ceiling for the period of P55.2 billion by 6.7 percent.

The amount, however, was lower than the P61.21 billion shortfall a year ago mainly due to improved revenue collections this year.

Despite the higher-than-expected first quarter budget shortfall, the government said it was still confident of meeting its 2003 deficit ceiling of P202 billion or 4.7 percent of the gross domestic product.

In March, alone, the budget gap was P27.2 billion.

"The national government is confident that it will achieve the full-year deficit target given the improving trend in revenue collection," Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho said in yesterday's press briefing.

"We have seen increasing revenue collections since the third quarter of 2002. This is a result of the unrelenting efforts of the Bureau of Customs and the Bureau of Internal Revenue to improve collection performance," Camacho said.

Camacho said revenue collections increased by 9.2 percent to P136.6 billion while expenditures grew by only 4.9 percent to P195.4 billion from a year ago.

Total revenue for the quarter surpassed the P131.9-billion target by 3.5 percent.

The BOC exceeded its own goal by 18.6 percent, contributing P26.7 billion or 19.6 percent of the total government revenue for the first three months of the year.

The BIR registered a 3.8-percent growth in collections to P89.9 billion but was still 5 percent off its first quarter target of P94.6 billion.

For its part, the BIR collected P13.5 billion or 70.1 percent better than its target.

He said these agencies had thoroughly reviewed their respective systems, identified the loopholes and devised innovative administrative reforms that led to revenue growth.

"But we are not stopping here. We will continue to pursue other reform measures not only to ensure that we will meet this year's fiscal targets but also to further build the foundation for our long-term fiscal goals," Camacho explained.

For the month of March alone, the government's revenue collections increased by 13.2 percent to P45.2 billion vis-a-vis P72.4 billion worth of expenditures, resulting in a P27.2-billion deficit.

Actual spending for the first three months reached P195.4 billion or 3.5 percent higher than the target, but the Department of Budget and Management said this was due to the front-loading of some of the expenditures originally intended for the second quarter.

The higher first quarter deficit did not come as a surprise as the government had warned its preliminary tax taking were below target for the period. The government said there was extra spending for advances made in preparation for the 2004 general election amounting to P1.8 billion, which was released to the Commission on Elections last March, and another P4 billion for government employees' clothing allowances.

For the first quarter, the government's net financing declined by 51 percent to P48.7 billion as the government rejected high bids for treasury bills and bonds as well as for the redemption of local treasury bonds.

The government also issued a total of $800 million worth of global bonds and eurobonds in January and February this year for its external financing requirements.

EEI eyes big chunk of $680-M Bechtel contract in Iraq

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

PHILIPPINE engineering and construction company EEI Corp. is bidding to take a big slice of Bechtel Corp.'s $680-million contract to rebuild Iraq's utility services and repair its airports and seaport.

Trade and Industry Secretary Manuel A. Roxas II yesterday revealed that EEI Corp. chair Ruzalino Navarro recently left for San Francisco to meet with Bechtel officials for subcontracting deals in postwar Iraq.

Roxas, a member of the Presidential task force on Iraq, said that EEI had dealings with Bechtel which has tapped the Yuchengco-controlled company to supply skilled manpower for a number of its projects worldwide. EEI is Bechtel's local agent. One of Bechtel's subcontracting arrangements with EEI was the construction of a power plant in the Middle East.

The United States Agency for International Development announced last week that it had awarded the contract for Iraq's emergency infrastructure repair and rehabilitation to Bechtel.

The contract is initially worth $34.6 million but this is expected to balloon to $680 million

A PHILIPPINE Airlines plane is being loaded with cargo at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport. Airline officials earlier announced that PAL's net profit in fiscal year ending March 31 had amounted to only about P500 million, way off its target of P1 billion. The lower-than-expected profit was blamed on the war in Iraq and the SARS crisis.

STOCK MARKET Stocks end lower on technical correction

PROFIT-TAKING pushed local shares to a moderately lower close in tight trade yesterday as investors secured gains after the market climbed more than 7 percent in the past three weeks.

Traders said the players expected first quarter corporate earnings to be weak due to the impact of the Iraq war and a depreciated peso. But prospects were brighter in the second half with fewer external risks, they added.

The main stock index lost 8.10 points or 0.72 percent to 1,117.12 points. But the broader All Shares index rose 2.03 points or 0.3 percent to 682.73 points.

The market is up 7.6 percent since the start of April and 9.69 percent so far this year.

Further reductions in oil prices seen

By Ronnel W. Domingo

PUMP prices of petroleum products are expected to go down further this month following the continued drop in the prices of crude oil in the world market, Energy Secretary Vincent Perez Jr. said yesterday.

"Additional price cuts after last Thursday's reduction could be justified (considering the softening of international prices)," Perez said in an interview.

The DOE's monitoring showed that Dubai crude prices dropped by $8.82 from about $31.18 per barrel in Feb. 25 (before the war broke out) to $22.36 on April 7—a five-month low for the benchmark price due to the quick resolution of the conflict in Iraq.

Perez expressed hope that the softening in the world market prices of crude oil would soon be reflected in local pump prices.

On April 17, Pilipinas Shell Petroleum, TotalFinaElf Philippines, Petron, Caltex Philippines, Seacol

Philippines and Flying V announced a 30-centavo per liter price cut for gasoline and 20 centavos per liter for diesel.

Roberto Kanapi, Pilipinas Shell general manager for external affairs, said the reduction was in anticipation of crude price changes in May.

"(Considering) that international prices for both crude oil and finished petroleum products have softened recently, we aim to be price competitive by reflecting this in local pump prices this early," he said.

Virginia Ruivivar, Petron public affairs manager, said the move was just the first of a series of possible price cuts assuming that crude prices in the world market would continue to go down.

Dubai crude prices averaged at $27.38 per barrel in March, down by $2.64 from $30.02 per barrel in February.

The Organization of Petroleum Countries, however, which pumps about one third of the world's oil is considering a production cut on grounds that there is too much oil in the market.

Opec opened its taps ahead of the war in Iraq to allay concerns of a price spike once the shooting began.

Opec members agreed in January to a production target of 24.5 million barrels a day, but estimates show that actual production was actually closer to 26.2 million barrels a day.

But with the Iraq conflict quickly resolved, the Opec fears the world is now awash with crude which could lead to a crash in prices.

The Opec has called an emergency meeting for Thursday in Austria to assess postwar conditions in the oil market, with a view to slashing output to bolster sagging prices. With a report from AP

Local IT firm focuses on Japan market

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

ADVANCED Technology and Systems Inc. (ADTX), a Philippine subsidiary of IBM Japan, and the Alcantara group are gearing up to further expand their foothold in Japan's outsourcing business.

ADTX vice president Ramil Villanueva said the partners were expecting a rise in demand for outsourcing deals as more Japanese companies, driven by rising costs at home, seek to tap overseas companies for part of their computer operations.

ADTX—a pioneer research and development company for firmware and device driver, storage solution, mobile device, retail solution, application software and quality assurance service—is projecting a 21-percent growth in sales to Japan this year to P170 million but Villanueva said the company had barely scratched the surface of Japan's outsourcing market.

Villanueva said the potential for outsourcing in Japan was huge but there were only a handful of Philippine companies looking at Japan as a potential market.

He said most information technology (IT) companies in the Philippines had their eyes on the US because Japan was a difficult market to penetrate due to the culture and language barrier and its clustered business structure.

Villanueva said the Philippines had to produce more IT professionals geared for the Japanese market in order to compete with India and China that were cornering most of the outsourcing contracts from Japan.

ADTX has decided to establish its own training program in a tie-up with NITT Philippines that would produce at least 40 graduates a year.

ADTX plans to draft the most promising IT graduates nationwide as scholars in a 5-month intensive training program to make IT engineers that are knowledgeable in general IT concepts based on Jitse (Japanese IT Standard Examination), up to date in emerging and new technologies such as Linux and Java, and proficient in business skills and the Japanese language, Nihongo.

Villanueva said the graduates would be deployed in ADTX's operations and its partnership with Alsons Corp., Alsons/ADTX Information Systems Inc. (AAISI), that provide services in application development, web solutions, and system integration.

ADTX, which was formed in 1993, was able to establish a foothold in Japan largely because of its owners' linkages in Japan, its thrust to meet the computer needs of Japanese businessmen operating in the Philippines (especially those in the economic zones), and its strategy to cater to all clients (a major Japanese company has a bigger outsourcing operation in the Philippines but all its businesses are in-house).

GMA extends term of CDC management

CLARK FIELD, Pampanga—President Macapagal-Arroyo has extended for another year the term of Emmanuel Y. Angeles as president and chief executive officer of Clark Development Corp. (CDC) and his entire management team.

The President, likewise, re-appointed the members of the CDC board led by its chair Ruzalimo S. Navarro. The other board members are Victor Jose Luciano, Rufo Colayco, Benigno Ricafort, Elouisa Narciso, Victor Yap, Maximino Sangil, Armando Madamba, Jesus Nicaño and Wilhelmina Paras.

The CDC officials' term expired on March 31.

Under Angeles' administration, CDC posted P7.06 billion worth of investments from 161 contracts signed in 2001 and 2002. The P7.06-billion worth of investments represent 13.76 percent of the P51.30 billion in investment commitments secured by CDC since its inception in 1993. To date, the amount is the third biggest investment secured by a CDC president despite the economic crunch.

Lights out in Calatagan

FORMER Batangas Gov. J. Antonio Leviste may have to serenade billionaire Chito Madrigal-Colanthes with the World War II-era song "Don't Fence Me In" if he wants to continue with his Calatagan lighthouse project.

Dofia Chito, according to the grapevine, has barred unauthorized passage leading to the Calatagan lighthouse being leased and transformed by a Leviste foundation into a hotel-restaurant combine.

The extended Madrigal family, including Dofia Chito, maintains weekend residences along the idyllic Batangas shoreline, with the single road leading through with the Spanish-era lighthouse passing through the sprawling Madrigal property.

The Madrigals, according to a family friend, are concerned that the commercialization of the lighthouse would bring too much traffic and unwanted rubberneckers into the otherwise secluded community whose unmarked weekend houses include those of former Ambassador Raul Goco, port services king Enrique Razon Jr., presidential balas Herman Montenegro, real estate developer Elena Tanyu-Coyuto and a couple of rumored drug lords-smugglers.

Madrigal scion, Bo Warnes, who has quietly transformed that section of the Calatagan bay into a fish sanctuary—guarded 24/7 by a Coast Guard detachment whose living expenses and quarters are provided for by Warnes—is especially aghast at how Leviste grafted a rectangular cement promenade on to the lighthouse cliff.

Work on the Calatagan lighthouse has been suspended for some time now, apparently because of the right-of-way problem, especially after the Madrigal matriarch got miffed with the construction crew passing through her property without so much as a by-your-leave.

The Calatagan parola restaurant-hotel complex is part of a Leviste program to rehabilitate historic lighthouses and transform them into tourist destinations. Leviste, a governor of the Board of Investments and chair of the Philippine Leisure and Retirement Authority, heads a private foundation that was able to sign an agreement with the Coast Guard to lease a number of the now abandoned lighthouses.

PLDT cuts by half leased line rates for ISPs

By Abigail L. Ho

DOMINANT carrier Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. has reduced by half its leased line rates for independent Internet service providers in view of the strong competition posed by other local telecommunication companies.

An industry source yesterday said that from almost P90,000 to P100,000 per month for an E1/R2 circuit, PLDT had reduced its rate for ISPs to only about P50,000 per month for the same service.

An E1/R2 is a circuit that can handle 30 simultaneous calls at any given time.

"PLDT already lowered the cost of its E1/R2s, although the competition offers the same service at lower rates," the source said.

Local ISP group Philippine Internet Services Organization (Piso) in October last year accused PLDT of discriminatory pricing of lines. It claimed that PLDT had been charging independent ISPs rates higher than the level charged on regular corporate customers.

Although Piso's complaint was filed with the National Telecommunications Commission, the House of Representatives also held hearings on it after Quirino Rep. Junie Cua gave a privilege speech in October accusing PLDT of trying to create a monopoly in cyberspace.

He said PLDT was working toward this through discriminatory and predatory pricing schemes that could eventually drive its competitors in the ISP arena out of business.

During hearings at the House, the source said several congressmen pressured PLDT to bring down its rates for ISPs and even to open its digital subscriber line (DSL) Internet infrastructure to independent ISPs.

Another point in Piso's complaint was PLDT's refusal to open its "always on," high-speed Internet infrastructure to other players. Because of this, ISPs could only offer conventional dial-up Internet service, or access that users would have to sign on for every time they used it.

"PLDT's lawyers said opening up its DSL infrastructure would entail a certain investment on the part of PLDT. This is what we'll be settling in a meeting tomorrow (Wednesday)," the source said.

PLDT executives will be meeting with Piso officials today.

In a related development, Mosaic Communications Inc. president William Torres said, despite tough competition from telecommunication firms, independent ISPs would be here to stay as they could offer more value-added services than their telco-owned counterparts.

He explained that Internet value-added services were not part of a telecom firm's main business so it would be harder for them than for independent ISPs to concentrate on value-added services. "Independent ISPs will survive because they're needed by society. Society needs more than just access. They also need content. Telcos can go into those things but that's not their main business so it will be harder for them," he said.

Trade data revisions show deficits in 2 yrs

THE GOVERNMENT revised yesterday its trade figures for the last three years following statistical discrepancies, saying the country suffered trade deficits instead of surpluses in 2001 and 2002.

In a statement, the National Statistics Office acknowledged it had largely underestimated the volume of raw material imports for the key electronics sector for the past three years.

It then revised upwards the country's 2002 imports by 5.5 percent to $35.427 billion and exports upward by 0.38 percent to $35.201 billion from figures issued earlier.

"The resulting trade balance in goods amounted to a deficit of $219 million, a decline from the old series of $1.63-billion surplus," the statement said.

It said the country also suffered a trade deficit in 2001 of $907 million, instead of a $2.59-billion surplus, while the trade surplus for 2000 was reduced to $3.587 billion from $6.691 billion.

The Philippine trade figures became an issue last year when the Wall Street Journal challenged the data on imported raw materials for the key electronics sector.

The sector accounts for 69 percent of merchandise exports of the Philippines.

The NSO said the adjustments on the import data were largely based on information from a survey of imported raw materials it jointly carried out with the central bank. AFP

Improving business in Eaga through CIQS harmonization

It was during the 5th Senior Officials Meeting (SOM) of the BIMPEaga in 1996 when the idea of harmonizing CIQS Rules, Regulations and Procedures (RRPs) among its member-countries was first introduced.

Before I get ahead of myself, allow me to explain this peculiar acronym. It stands for customs, immigration, quarantine and security, hence, CIQS. These are the areas of regulation with the greatest bearing on the mobility of people and goods among the Eaga countries.

The presumption is that current regulations governing trade and travel within the Eaga are arbitrary and discordant, thereby making it hard for businessmen to operate smoothly and cost-effectively; and for tourists to easily hie off to the Eaga country of their choice.

If we were to envision a more conducive environment for trade and business cooperation in the BIMPEaga, the harmonization of CIQS needs to take place. It means that there should be uniformity in rules, fees and requirements.

Prior to the envisioned Eaga-wide rationalization, it is important to streamline the regulations at the country level. This means cutting red tape, ensuring transparency in rules, reducing the number of documentary requirements, making fees more affordable and standardized, decentralizing approval authority and a host of other reforms.

As an illustration, if I were to export mangoes to say, Malaysia, I would need accreditation documents (city business permit, DTI registration, etc.); an authority to load, export declaration; commodity clearance certificate; certificate of origin, certificate of shipment (which requires that I submit a commercial invoice, bill of lading, and copy of the processed export declaration); and a phytosanitary certificate (which needs an application for inspection and, again, the export declaration) and permit to import (issued by the importing country). I would also need to pay for the issuance of the certificate of origin, phytosanitary certification, community pot, and documentary stamps.

Whew! All that, and I haven't even mentioned freight cost yet! How about how long it takes to accomplish all those requirements?

Going back to much-needed developments in the CIQS effort, as the story goes, after that historic SOM in 1996, the Asian financial crisis followed, effectively putting the BIMPEaga (and of course, the CIQS initiative) on hold.

In 2000, the Mindanao Economic Development Council (MEDCo)—the government agency mandated to act as coordinating body for the BIMPEaga in the Philippines—resumed working toward CIQS harmonization. A Mindanao-Palawan consultation was conducted, in order to gather current concerns and issues.

Later, as a first step toward the streamlining process, the MEDCo published the first Philippine CIQS primer. The primer was seen as a good thing by the private sector in the Philippine-Eaga, as well as other member-countries, as it provided them with a single source for all the rules, documentary requirements, and fees necessary to do business in our country. You can also access the primer in the Web (<http://www.medco.gov.ph>). This document enabled the different government agencies concerned to see areas where they could possibly merge procedures and avoid duplication.

Davao City was again instrumental in the CIQS initiative when in 2001, it hosted the first BIMPEaga CIQS conference. This enabled representatives from the concerned government agencies all over the Eaga to discuss CIQS issues and concerns between and among the member countries, and identify priority CIQS RRP reforms.

I am sure that Filipino enterprises doing business in the Eaga have benefited from what has been achieved so far. Unfortunately, the harmonization effort has not been moving as rapidly as we hoped.

Overall, as far as the Philippine government is concerned, it is still at the streamlining stage. Since regulatory reforms are mainly legislated or are decided upon at the national level, the streamlining process is slow. Also, our Eaga counterparts have yet to come up with the same measures our country has come up with.

Since it is the private sector that will eventually benefit from this undertaking, we have decided to do our part. Last March 11, the East Asian Business Council, which is the private sector representative of the BIMPEaga, met to discuss its forthcoming plans, particularly those that deal with BIMPEaga CIQS harmonization.

The EABC members aim to see how far their respective governments have gone, make recommendations, and activate mechanisms to institute the needed changes. One way by which the EABC may accomplish this is through the creation of as many cross-border task forces as possible, rationalizing RRP at the local level. Policy recommendations and advocacy will also be done. Another feasible project is to facilitate the creation of one-stop processing centers so that exporters need not go to different offices to fulfill shipping requirements.

I am sure that our friends in the government will welcome our involvement, no matter that the CIQS falls within the realm of public policy. The ultimate goal, after all, is fostering greater trade, tourism, and investments in the BIMPEaga. Simply put, business.

(Ms. Bian is the chair of the Mindanao Business Council and the vice chair of the East Asian Business Council.)

BSP sees 'much better' balance of payment position in April

By Doris C. Dumlaog

THE BANGKO Sentral ng Pilipinas said yesterday it was expecting a "much better" balance of payment position in April following a $557-million deficit in March.

In a news briefing, acting BSP Governor Amado Tetangco Jr. also announced that the central bank might revise its full-year BOP surplus target of $100 million to $200 million to account for recent revisions in the government's import data.

"We will review that (BOP target) together with the revised import number for 2002," Tetangco said.

On Tuesday, the government revised its trade figures for the last three years following statistical discrepancies, saying the country suffered trade deficits instead of surpluses in 2002 and 2001.

The National Statistics Office acknowledged it largely underestimated the volume of raw material imports for the key electronics sector for the past three years.

It then revised upwards the country's 2002 imports by 5.5 percent to $35.427 billion and exports upward by 0.38 percent to $35.201 billion from figures issued earlier.

Tetangco said these revisions would not affect the $660-million

BOP surplus recorded for 2002.

"That will remain the same. What will be revised will be the breakdown of the BOP," Tetangco said. "The bottom line will remain the same because that is based on the change in international reserves where there is no change." Asked whether the Philippines might end up with a deficit, Tetangco replied, "There's some offsetting with the short term capital accounts."

Restraining order vs VAT on banks sought

By Elena R. Torrijos

A THRIFT bank has asked the court to stop the Department of Finance and the Bureau of Internal Revenue from implementing the value-added tax on financial institutions.

Real Bank Inc. said in a petition filed with the Quezon City Regional Trial Court that the VAT on financial institutions was unconstitutional because "it violates due process, it does not comply with the constitutional requirements of equitableness and progressiveness and does not adhere with the goal of the national economy."

The bank has asked the court to issue an order to prevent the Department of Finance and Bureau of Internal Revenue from implementing the VAT.

Executive Judge Catal Mendonza of QC RTC Branch 219 instead summoned Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho and BIR Commissioner Guillermo Parayno to appear before the court as the case will be raffled tomorrow at 2 p.m.

"Hopefully we will have the TRO by Friday," Real Bank president Reynaldo Sarmiento said in an interview yesterday.

Sarmiento said that it was urgent that the TRO be issued as the BIR has required financial institutions to submit the VAT returns on April 25.

Commercial banks, thrift banks and rural banks have opposed the implementation of the VAT on financial institutions on grounds that it would lead to a 10-percent increase in the interest payments of borrowers, a decline in lending and increase in loan defaults.

The banks have instead asked for the permanent implementation of the gross receipts tax.

Victorias Milling reports 11% hike in first-half net

VICTORIAS Milling Co. yesterday reported that its earnings before interest, tax, depreciation and amortization rose 11 percent to P50 million in the first half of its crop year covering September last year to February this year.

Victorias president Arthur Aguilar reported that during the period under review, raw sugar production rose 7 percent to 3.5 million bags, while refined sugar production soared 26 percent to 3.5 million bags.

Victorias accounts for approximately 13 percent of raw sugar and 31 percent of refined sugar production in the Philippines.

Victorias also recently got a boost with a P300-million loan from tobacco magnate Lucio Tan's Tanduay Holdings Inc. at a very low interest rate.

The loan is convertible into a 16-percent equity into the company by the third year and represents compliance with the sugar mill's second rehabilitation plan.

Roxas expressed confidence that the Philippines would get a sizable amount of the multi-billion dollars worth of projects that would be contracted and subcontracted in Iraq's post-war rehabilitation program of the U.S. military.

BSP to ease grip on local money supply

By Doris C. Dumlaog

WITH the economic risks created by the US-led war in Iraq petering out, the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas said yesterday it was ready to loosen its grip on domestic money supply should demand for credit expand.

Acting BSP Governor Amando Tetangco told reporters yesterday the central bank was checking whether there was enough liquidity in the system to fuel growth.

"We think we have adequate liquidity right now, but we will continue to follow this and see if there is any up-tick in demand for credit," Tetangco said.

He said the central bank, even at the height of uncertainties in the Middle East, kept a neutral stance on its key overnight rates.

Instead of raising its rates, the BSP removed the tiering system on bank placements and increased the liquid reserve requirement by a percentage point to mop excess liquidity that was being used to speculate against the peso.

The overnight borrowing and lending rates were kept at 7 percent and 9.25 percent.

On the other hand, the BSP removed starting last March 20 the three-tiered system for banks' placements with it.

The overnight reverse repurchase transactions with the BSP are now being accepted at a flat rate of 7 percent in lieu of a tiering system, while term RRRs and special deposit accounts are being paid the published rates for corresponding maturities at a certain spread over the overnight RRP rate.

Trade dep't shuts doors on new private emission testing centers

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

THE DEPARTMENT of Trade and Industry has temporarily shut its doors on new private emission testing centers in Metro Manila to prevent cutthroat competition among existing franchise holders.

Trade Secretary Manuel Roxas II also ordered the suspension of 17 emission testing centers caught without DTI accreditation and canceled the license of one center operating outside its designated franchise area.

Roxas said there were 58 emission testing centers accredited to operate in the National Capital Region, more than enough to accommodate all vehicles in the area.

"We would like to protect those who have already invested in this undertaking by preventing cutthroat competition due to the saturation of the market," Roxas said.

The moratorium and clampdown on emission testing centers are expected to mollify rate operators who have complained about the flurry of licenses coming out in the past few months that have saturated the market.

The cutthroat competition has put in peril millions worth of investments—each lane is worth P1.5 million—made by emission testing center operators lured into the business after the trade department promised to protect their interest by limiting the number of emission testing center operators to a single testing lane for every 15,000 registered vehicles.

BIR set to probe 11,000 firms violating labor laws

THE BUREAU of Internal Revenue said yesterday it would look into the tax compliance of nearly 11,000 firms found violating the country's labor laws.

"(Senate Majority Leader Loren Legarda's) hint that these firms could also be violating not only labor but also tax laws was a good observation, and I don't see any reason why the BIR would not go after them if they have really committed tax violations," BIR Deputy Commissioner Licerio Evangelista said in an interview.

Legarda has asked the BIR to investigate whether the firms found violating the country's labor laws were also skirting their tax obligations.

The senator urged the Department of Labor and Employment to submit to the BIR a list of companies violating the country's labor laws so that the BIR could audit their tax declarations.

PPA seen saving P24M by ending N. Harbor water distribution deal

By Abigail L. Ho

THE PHILIPPINE Ports Authority said yesterday it would save as much as P24 million by pre-terminating its North Harbor water distribution contract with Blue Crown Marine and Hydro Services Inc.

Blue Crown sued the PPA in July 1999 for failing to deliver 150,000 cubic meters of water a month as stated in its contract.

The delayed turnover of the water distribution system also cost Blue Crown around P10.1 million in pre-operating expenses.

"If we don't agree to pre-terminate the contract, the cost of damages would further bloat, and we may not be able to take advantage of the waivers on the up-front money as well as the interest earnings," PPA general manager Alfonso Cusi said in a statement.

"The more we forestall the termination of the contract," he added, "the more interest and cost damages we need to pay in the future."

Under a proposed settlement agreement, the PPA will pay Blue Crown P44.18 million representing the minimum potential income of the contractor for the 15-year contract that began in 1998.

This amount excluded the P10 million in up-front payment made by the contractor to the PPA and the P4.6 million in interest earnings from that up-front payment.

The Office of the Government Corporate Counsel recently endorsed the proposed settlement.

Government Corporate Counsel Manuel Teehankee said in an opinion dated March 6 that the settlement agreement provided a waiver on the P10-million up-front money as well as the P4.64 million in interest earnings on this payment.

LUCENA CITY—Pests are threatening Quezon province's coconut farms and its potential as one of Taiwan's major sources of fresh buko, Philippine Coconut Authority administrator Danilo Coronacion has warned.

Coronacion said the "cadang-cadang" pest infestation originated in Bicol and had been detected in several coconut plantations in the island town of Jomalig in northern Quezon.

Coconut trees in the infected areas have already been "quarantined" by local PCA field workers to contain the infestation, he said.

Coronacion declined to estimate the damage caused by the infestation.

According to PCA reports, there are also some provinces in Luzon and the Visayas that are affected by cadang-cadang in varying degrees.

The rate of spread, however, is insignificant at only 0.5 kilometer a year.

Cadang-cadang is a lethal disease among palm trees.

"There's no cure except to cut the coconut trees in the area," Coronacion told members of the Interim Quezon Provincial Coconut Development Council.

"All the coco lumber that has been landing at the port of Mauban came from the area. There's no cause for alarm of illegal coconut tree cutting," he also assured members of the council.

Coronacion expressed concern that the coconut infestation in Quezon would affect the province's chance of regaining its foothold as a major source of fresh buko exports to Taiwan.

He has expressed apprehension that Cavite, Batangas and Laguna may not cope with the volume of the order once the lucrative fresh buko trade between Taiwan and the Philippines resumes.

Local execs press NSC to pay debts

ILIGAN CITY—The city government here is pressing the National Steel Corp. to settle over P655 million worth of back-taxes.

Huge losses of up to P16 billion forced the NSC to shut down in 1999, dealing Iligan City and Mindanao huge economic losses in terms of production of downstream industries and lost employment opportunities. The NSC had 2,000 employees when it closed down.

Government liquidators have since administered the NSC's properties, while the government pursues talks to resurrect the firm.

City treasurer Ernesto Balat has informed liquidators that the NSC owes the Iligan city government some P655 million in real estate taxes, interest and penalties dating back to 1999.

In an interview, Balat said the collectible prompted the city council to pass two resolutions, one ordering the City Assessor's Office to assess the NSC's property tax delinquency, and another authorizing Mayor Franklin Quijano to participate in any negotiation for the rehabilitation and reopening of the NSC.

In his letter to NSC liquidator Danilo Concepcion, Balat said the city government would take measures to collect the NSC's debts, including the issuance of a warrant of levy and notice of levy on the firm's properties.

Boracay by bus for less than P800 and 14 hours

WHO SAYS Boracay is only for the rich when one can already get to the island for less than P800?

Now, one who wishes to spend a summer vacation in Boracay will only have to prepare P740 to take him to the island via a convenient bus ride from Cebu for just a little over half a day.

No need to take a leave-of-absence from work on your departure day just to catch the trip, as the bus (Bachelor Express) leaves the Ali Mall Terminal at 11 p.m. and proceeds to the Batangas port for a Ro-ro (roll-on, roll-off) ferry trip.

Aklan Governor Florencio T. Miraflores said the new transportation provides an advantage for tourists. In terms of fare, it is cheaper, even compared to that of the economy-class ferry ticket, which is roughly P1,000 per head, plus the land transportation expenses going to the pier. Boracay-bus also cuts travel time to 14 hours instead of the regular 17 to 22 hours.

Aside from the opportunity to enjoy the panoramic sights along the way, tourists will also experience island hopping as the ferry docks in Calapan, Mindoro, then Roxas City. They will then be transferred to the Roro Maharlika 3 daily to reach the newly opened Cat-

Jetty Port and Terminal at 1 p.m.

Lifestyle's celebration of successful journey

GLOBAL attitudes in health have changed drastically in the past decade. And as people become more and more conscious of their body's well being, a plethora of products have been made available in the market. In the Philippines, one company has come to symbolize not only healthy living but income opportunity as well.

Lifestyles, through its now famous Intra food supplement, pioneered a multi-level marketing scheme that not only promotes health but also assures income for many Filipinos.

Lifestyle's journey to the unparalleled success it is experiencing today covers 30 countries and transacts in over 15 currencies worldwide, including the Philippines.

In thanksgiving for the many triumphs, Lifestyles Asia Pacific Philippines recently hosted a National Gala at the Manila Hotel. Highlighted by the exclusive distributor launch of the innovative Dream Diet Program and the announcement of the first international gathering of Lifestyles distributors from April 24 to 26 in Toronto, Canada, the event was a resounding victory.

Attended by top-brass international Lifestyle management team together with the local distributors, the gala night was truly a celebration of everyone's successful journey.

New indie mag out

WHAT constitutes a good read?

Angst is ancient. Angry men and women should cease from upping the count of the "angry" population. Artsy-fartsy is passé, and the world is too small to accommodate individuals who have forgotten to be "grounded."

What readers need now is some slippery substance. How can substantial read be slippery?

Moist—the latest independent magazine to hit the local shelves dares you to read, be informed, get entertained, in the process "what your mind with words". If you've heard of such promises already, Moist is the fulfillment of it, the magazine definition of a good read.

Moist is composed of five sections: "Symbols & Metaphors", for the literature section to be edited by Dr. Cirilo F. Bautista (Palanca Hall of Fame member, Centennial Literary awardee, and one of the country's foremost poets and critics), "Panangutanan", for social advocacy, "Eggheadentertainment" for the movies, music and arts section, "Project: Soul Trade" for the consumerism section, and "G-spot" for gender and relationships.

Add to that the various columns, articles and essays that cater to the target audience of Moist, which is the 18 to 30 years old students, musicians, writers, slackers, even tattoo artists.

Over 5,700 new geodetic engineers

MORE than 5,700 junior geodetic engineers registered with the Professional Regulation Commission will be upgraded to geodetic engineers. This would be the result of the signing into law by President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo of what was otherwise known as Republic Act 9200. An amended law or RA 8560, this law takes effect 15 days following its publication in major daily newspapers. This was announced by engineer Eldred R. Tumbocon, president of the Association of Junior Geodetic Engineers of the Philippines (Ajgep Inc.).

Engineer Reynaldo A. Carpio, Ajgep area chair, said the amendment provides the automatic registration without examination of all incumbent junior geodetic engineers to geodetic engineers, with certain provisions that they should have been in active practice for three years and shall have filed their application for upgrading within a prescribed period of three years upon effect of this Act. Accordingly, the examination for junior geodetic engineers shall cease to be conducted by virtue of this Act. However, all existing duly registered geodetic engineers may still continue to practice until their new license has been acted upon.

According to engineer Jeannette Co. Ajgep vice president, during the joint special meeting of the Ajgep and the Society of Filipino Geodetic Engineers (SFGE) at Quezon Memorial Circle April 1, Ms. Macapagal signed the amendment into law to correct a legal infirmity and to give justice to all registered junior geodetic engineers who were deprived of the practice of their profession due to a provision of Republic Act 8560.

Dr. Anselmo Almazan, president of the SFGE and considered a consistent supporter of junior geodetic engineers, added that with the passage of RA 9200, the newly upgraded geodetic engineers will complement their elder brothers in achieving greater heights in the profession.

New TV program for workforce launched

"EVERY qualified Filipino has a job that enables him or her to live with dignity, a country with zero unemployment, and a globally competitive workforce." This is the vision of "Workforce."

"Workforce" is a 30-minute television program on RPN-9 aired every Sunday at 2 p. m. that serves as a venue for both job seekers and employers. Tita Datu Puangco, columnist of Philippine Daily Inquirer's People at Work and president of Ancilla Enterprise Development Consulting, hosts the program.

Its pilot episode aired last March 9 and was formally launched to the media and advertising agencies last Tuesday, April

8. The launch was well represented by both media and advertising agencies including Philippine Daily Inquirer, "People at Work sa DZRH," People in Jobs, Inc. and Smart Communications.

During the launch, Puangco shared some dismal labor statistics that showed that there are 3 million Filipinos who are unemployed or underemployed and 700,000 new graduates who are currently seeking employment. In addition, she also mentioned that a number of graduates since 2001 have not yet been employed up to the present. She also says that there is a mismatch between available manpower and available jobs due to inadequate national manpower planning, wasted scarce resources and the brain drain.

She pointed out that if the current trends continue, by the year 2030, our children will experience far worse conditions than what we have today like a population of 160 million of which 70 to 90 million (equivalent to our current population) will live below the poverty line. She also predicted that unless appropriate programs are put into place, in the future, we may be competing not against Thailand or Vietnam but against Bangladesh and that we will be the most corrupt nation in Asia if not the world we are already ranked number 11 by Transparency International.

Puangco emphasizes, "The signs are clear. Our nation is headed towards an irreversible path of economic decline and moral decadence and we can not rely on government alone to do the turnaround job!"

In this backdrop, "Workforce" was conceptualized to bridge the gap between job seekers and headhunters and tackle the issues of finding, retaining, and doing well at work.

Identifying who he was and what he wanted was a major crisis in Santamaria's development as a corporate man. "I was determined to grow and move up. I always did my best. In sales, I made sure I was ahead. I set goals for

"What keeps us going is the conviction that the work we do is fulfilling our mission in life," explains Santamaria, adding that the sense of mission he shares with his wife is the underlying reason for everything they do.

Long before he thought of joining CSI, Santamaria dreamed of being on his own, of being his own boss someday. He imagined doing it when he got tired of the corporate life. "I did not realize until later that my prayers had been answered and that the Lord had led me to where I wanted to be," he remarks. "I believe I have achieved something worthwhile for God, for man, for my country and for myself."

myself. When I had achieved a certain level, I made sure I moved higher. Every opportunity became a challenge," says Santamaria. His career peaked in the 80s but retirement soon followed.

Career switch

His one regret, says Santamaria, is that he could have moved to another job and earned more. There certainly was no lack of offers. "I was offered a position in another pharmaceutical firm when I was marketing manager. But it did not appeal to me. Besides, I felt a great deal of loyalty for Mead Johnson." Moreover, he enjoyed good relations with the organization and relished the challenge of what he was doing.

Consultancy was farthest from Santamaria's mind, though he immediately saw the challenge it presented. Exposure to training programs when he was in marketing had sparked his interest. His experience as a student leader at the University of the Philippines, where he finished his Bachelor of Arts in Political Science and in Foreign Service, had broadened his perspective. He also taught English for four years at Feati University.

Service

Not surprisingly, Santamaria is motivated by a sense of service. "It's gratifying that through the service we render, we're able to help bring about personal or organizational transformation." Seeing clients improve and assume higher positions in the workplace is a constant source of fulfillment. It is, in fact, the driving spirit that pushes him forward. "It goes beyond monetary considerations," avers Santamaria. Perhaps it's what

What to do when faced with many career options

By Tita Datu Puangco

I READ your inspiring article in the Philippine Daily Inquirer last March 12, 2003. I wish to seek some advice on my career path. I have been in and out of jobs due to their contractual nature. Recently, I turned 26 and I began to realize the importance of taking the lead in my career and defining it well.

I am a graduate of AB Sociology from the University of the Philippines, Los Baños. My previous employment experiences were into teaching (STI and Montessori School), research assistant (Letran, Calamba, UP-LS and IRRRI) and corporate planning assistant. Basically my training was into research and the academe. I am in my second engagement as a consultant. The first was an environmental intervention; the current one is a human resource project-performance evaluation system.

I have set high standards and goals for myself and despite the big breaks I got I still feel the need to move up and expand my field of learning and opportunity. I believe I am highly trainable because, despite the lack of training, I manage to perform on my assigned tasks. Some employers see my lack of training as a liability. I think my

Advice

ANXIOUS PERSON

previous employers were not able to maximize and utilize my potentials, that's why I keep on moving, hoping that for every job I get into, would satiate my hunger for learning and advancement.

The competition is tough nowadays and I'm afraid I might be left behind by some of my contemporaries. What should I do, what step must I take next? I am interested to get a masters degree maybe an MBA or Organizational Development. Thank you for your time. More power to you!

Hungry For Learning

The career path that you have pursued the past five years is typical of this age. Unlike a decade ago when a person is expected to move up in a hierarchical fashion, in a single company, you are gathering learning and experiences across companies. This in fact will be the rule rather than the exception in the coming years.

What I sense you desire is a stable job that will give you roots so you can grow and develop to your full potential. While stable jobs are scarcer today, they still exist. The key is for you to be clear on your vision for yourself. Then, set your career goal.

Numerous choices

Based on your experiences, you have four choices. The fact that you have plenty of choices is causing you confusion. One is a career in the academe. Two is in human resources. Three is in research. Four is in corporate planning. You have to decide what area you want to pursue. Then focus your resume to highlight your accomplishments in the specific field.

From what I know of the job market, the area with the most potential is the area of human resource and organization development. As I move around as a consultant, client companies always ask me for people available in this area. I think you can use your competencies to become a good human resource or organization development officer.

Your knowledge and skills in sociology will come handy in relating to people, teams and organizations. Your research background is excellent in undertaking organizational surveys and studies. Your experience in corporate planning gives you a strategic view of enterprises and organizations.

Need for training

One drawback you mentioned is your lack of training. You can enroll in short courses or public seminars to skill up quickly in human resources and organization development. You can call the Ancilla Business Training Center or the Personnel Management Association of the Philippines for public seminars at reasonable rates. Then, for networking, you can also join the Organization Development Professionals Network. Get in touch with our office and we can give you contact numbers. Then, when you start working in the area, pursue a masters degree in organization development. It is best to pursue a degree when you have actual exposure in the field of study.

ILLUSTRATION BY

Through this column, I invite my friends in the profession to give "Hungry for Learning" an opportunity to pursue a career in human resource and organization development. Based on her letter, she has the competencies, job dimensions and good potential to succeed.

By the way, watch WorkForce that I host on Sundays over Channel 9 at 2 p.m. where we scroll job openings or check PDI's Job Market on Sundays or listen to People at Work as DZRH on Wednesday at 3:30 p.m.. Given all these resources, you will find the lead to pursue your career goal. Meantime, rest assured that your positive attitude towards learning is clearly an asset.

Influential moms change the world of work

WE broke the glass ceiling decades ago. Now, working moms are no longer arguing over the right to get there but rather the right to bring our families along with us.

When women got to the top of the corporate ladder, we sought not the laurels and the trophies that men are content with. Rather we wanted a chance to bring the rest of our family and community with us. We had to have the kind of work arrangement that would allow us work/life balance. Working moms are now changing the workplace, using our influence to make the top a better place.

Women of influence

In this month's issue of Metro Working Mom, we sought out 10 working moms who wield a considerable influence on the way we look at our lives and the way we work. They are all active parents, raising children 18 years old and below, and they are at the top of their field. We looked not only at how they have used their influence, but in particular how they got to where they are.

Influential moms like Loren Legarda, Nina Aguas, Sharon Cuneta, Ces Drilon, Gina Lopez, Tina Maustela-Ocampo, Sandy Prieto Romualdez, Charo Santos, Vicky Belo, and Margie Moran shared their thoughts. We put these together to create a formula of sorts, a checklist if you will, of factors that could propel you to the top of your field while staying balanced.

WORKING MOM

An Mercado Alcantara

Checklist

You must love your work. If going to work for you is just a means to pay the bills, then you won't have the energy nor the desire to wield your influence. Instead, you would be foot dragging and not getting the best out of your work, the sense of fulfillment, the affirmation to give back to your family. You can't talk about balance without discerning if what you're doing is really what you want to do.

You must nourish your spirit. All the working moms we talked to managed to squeeze in some time to take care of their inner self. We cannot be enthusiastic if we are exhausted. We cannot be compassionate if we are cruel to ourselves. We cannot be inspiring if we are empty. You must set aside time to recharge and rekindle your spirit.

You must have clear goals and priorities. Unless your life has focus, then you will be a loose cannon throwing your energies in all directions without achieving anything. Having a goal gives you a sense of mission.

Try to see solutions were other people see only problems. This is what separates the leaders from the followers. You don't stop at the knot, you buckle down and see how you can get out of it. Apply this to your work life. When everyone is stumped over a problem, be the one to explore options. Your influence will be felt immediately.

Game plan

You must be willing to ask for help. We can't be superwomen and pretend that we know everything. If we resist asking for help, we limit what we can do to what only one person can do. Imagine the power you can harness if you learn to delegate. Learn to seek answers from others. Never stop at "hindi ko kaya ito." Ask for help to get it done.

You must take risks. Influencing others and making changes in the way people do things requires a venturing out of your comfort zone. You must be willing to take a stand, be willing to do the unpopular thing if it means standing up for what you believe. Look to long and you'll never leap.

Never give up. Every great leader stumbles, but it's the getting up that counts. So, your proposal got rejected. Grieve a little bit, then hold yourself together and think up of a new plan. Resist the temptation to sulk and drop out of the game. Redefine the game and get back on track.

Successful corporate exec takes charge of own 'career system'

By Cecile G. Garcia

SWITCHING careers enabled Jorge G. Santamaria to take charge of his own 'career system.'

A corporate man all his life, he was vice president for the business division of Bristol Myers Phils and, at the same time, director for business development of Bristol Laboratories and Mead Johnson, when Santamaria decided to opt for early retirement in 1983. "I felt I had reached a dead-end in my job," he says. In 1985, he joined Career Systems, Inc., a company his wife Josie had formed two years earlier. "The company was struggling and my wife was deep into it. She needed help," says Santamaria.

Today, Santamaria is managing director of Career Systems, Inc. (CSI), the leading career development consultancy firm in the country, which celebrates its 20 years in the service on April 25.

Marketing role

Initially, he took care of the business aspect, handling the marketing for Career Systems,

Inc. (CSI). In time, however, his responsibility expanded and he began getting involved in designing programs with Josie and the rest of the consultants. "In marketing, I've been very effective in bringing clients from the pharmaceutical industry, which I was a part of for 23 years," says Santamaria. "In a way, I've always felt that I owe it to the industry to give back what I have learned."

Santamaria spearheaded the development of a course or program specially designed for pharmaceutical companies. "My wife and I did this together," he says. "It had been so effective that a number of these companies continue to use it. It could well be my legacy to CSI and to my former

Career success

Sixty-eight-year-old Santamaria started his career working as a medical representative for Mead Johnson in 1961. He rose to become supervisor, then regional field manager and sales manager in 1971. His career plan, according to Santamaria, was focused on getting to the top. "But my promotions came faster than I expected. I did not foresee the company's growth. In 1974, he became marketing manager for pharmaceuticals.

Clearly, his career plan had gone undeterred. Santamaria learned one hard lesson along the

THE QUIAPO cart is a curious sight. "Pamparegla," "pampagana," "pampapayat," these words scream from the labels of bottles filled with what looks like thick syrup. But the bottles take up only a small space of the cart. It is piled high with jars of all sizes, leaves, rocks, beads and minerals—all of which supposedly answer different human needs.

The lady who mans the cart deems herself a pharmacist of sorts. Her merchandise can heal anything, she says. She even uses them on herself.

She, like the other women who spend their days taking care of these carts, will summon you over if you give them as much as a glance.

Enchanting, enchanted Quiapo

THE OLD woman sat on a stool, surrounded by colorful stones, glass beads, little bottles and bits of wood. She didn't look like a wizard or an enchantress, more like someone's grandmother. But with the way she rattled off the supposed powers of her wares, one would think real magic existed in this world.

I held up a clear ball, that fit perfectly in the palm of my hand. "Crystal ball," she said to me, her eyes squinting in the afternoon sunlight. "Wishing stone din 'yan. Makikita mo diyan ang hihilingin mo."

CRYSTAL balls, pyramids and golden buddhas can be bought off the streets as easy as that.

ALL THE LUCK IN THE WORLD. These stones will bring you fortune, if you believe enough.

Crystal balls, lucky charms, a seahorse or two—you can find them on Evangelista Street, Quiapo's answer to 'Harry Potter's' Diagon Alley

She called the wooden chip "sinag-araw." She said that apart from being a lucky charm, it could get rid of envy and fight off people with evil intentions.

What looked like a shriveled bone was actually a seahorse. When boiled and drank, the old woman said the sea creature "can cure asthma." Python heads can cure stomachaches, she added.

The hopelessly in love may soon find themselves trooping over to Quiapo to buy love potions. This form of "gayuma" comes in tiny bottles. You're supposed to write your beloved's name on a piece of paper and slip it inside the bottle. Pretty soon—if you can actually believe this—the object of your obsession will constantly be thinking of you and will be at your beck and call.

"Manang, gayuma po ito?" a passerby with a toothy grin asked.

"Oo, para mapasaiyo ang gusto mo," the old woman answered in her raspy voice.

"Paano po kung pangalan ni Ara Mina ang itagay ko dito?" the joker asked. The old woman ignored him.

The gold bands hanging on one side of the stall are cures for rheumatism and numbness. There are amulets of all designs and purposes.

The pyramids bring luck, she said. So do the colorful stones. If it's prosperity in business that one seeks, the Mutya ng Dayap is the answer. "Agetch na bato," according to the woman, brings fortune to one's livelihood. The triangular blue stones offer protection against your enemies. The red one, which is called the "love stone," fights off envy and makes people like you.

"Buntot pagi" is an antidote for the effects of witchcraft. Bullets worn around the neck, along with other kinds of accessories adorning the stall, fight off the ill intentions of people.

Prices start at P25 to hundreds of pesos (mostly for the semiprecious stones and huge crystals).

The answers to all your problems in one stall for a few measly bucks! Now if they actually worked, wouldn't that make life much easier?

DIFFERENT amulets for different purposes

ANTI-EVIL. The Sinag-araw fights off people with bad intentions.

QUIAPO WIZARD. She believes in the immense powers of her wares.

THIS semi-precious stone will bring you luck for P350.

SABRINA wouldn't like this. Buntot pagi is an antidote to witchcraft.

HOPIA like it!

What they said: Master Hopia has the best hopia in Quiapo.

Master Hopia in Villalobos Street corner Echague Street is home to what a lot of people call "the best hopia," among other things. One hopia goes for P5. We tried the mango variety.

Our verdict: This hopia's texture is smooth, the flavors are subtle. It goes down easily. We don't have enough hopia authority to proclaim it as the best, but we're sure it comes close.

What they said: You can buy huge bags of nacho chips from Quinta market for less than a hundred.

A BAG of nachos for P26? Not bad at all

We explored Quinta market with gusto, keeping our eyes open for huge bags of nacho chips. We saw slabs of meat, PX goods, bars of soap, but no huge bags of chips. Two market vendors pointed us over to Kilion Trading on Orasco Street. The walls are lined with baking supplies and other goodies and yes, they had nacho chips.

Our verdict: The bag wasn't huge, but at P26 for the chips and P10 for the cheese sauce, it beats what most supermarkets and malls have to offer.

We also visited the store selling Excelente Cooked Ham on Palanca Street. People flock towards this store especially around the holidays to DIFFERENT people offered different suggestions. We gave them all a shot.

FEAR Factor—not. These century eggs are heavenly

NOT just for Christmas

THE P20 pancit palabok

AFTER Mass delight: Churchgoers go to J Canteen to enjoy pancit malabon

What they said: J Canteen proffers the best pancit in Quiapo.

J Canteen on 2 Paterno St. has been serving what has been tagged as "the best pancit in Quiapo" for eight years now. People have been known to head straight to this hole-in-the-wall right after attending Mass at Quiapo Church. A plateful of pancit palabok costs P20 while pancit malabon is a little more pricey at P30. The noodles are loaded with toppings and generously sprinkled with sinful chicharon.

Our verdict: It's pretty darn good. The serving is a little small if your appetite is huge or if you're extra hungry. We figured two orders would be enough to hit the spot. And at such low price, how can you go wrong with that?

buy ham for Noche Buena. Just outside Excelente, I was able to buy large century eggs for only P12. They were heavenly.

People will not go hungry in Quiapo. Apart from the numerous fast food chain branches sandwiched between stores selling all sorts of merchandise, you can find carts and carts of street food and stalls selling rice cakes and native delicacies. Some people go around with baskets selling homemade goodies for those brave enough to buy. There are fruit stands and vegetable stands and carts that sell softdrinks by the cup.

And when you are tired from walking around, when the sensual overload exhausts you and when the Quiapo heat finally gets to you, almost everything seems delicious.

E-mail the author at ppastor@inquirer.com.ph.

What they said: Globe (no, not the telecom) sells the best lumpia in Quiapo.

"Parang hindi ka pa nakapunta sa Quiapo kung hindi ka pa kumain dito," Gil Nartea, a photojournalism professor at the University of the Philippines, said as we watched the man behind the glass counter whip up lumpia after lumpia. Globe Lumpia, found in Quiapo's Raon Street has been around for 46 years now. That Thursday afternoon, happy patrons kept ordering fresh lumpia, made especially to suit their tastes (no garlic, extra garlic). Others walked in and left with their lumpia in brown bags. Each order costs only P16.

Our verdict: Each bite of lumpia is an explosion of different flavors that come together for an exhilarating experience of the palate. It's good, really good. Even my grandma agrees.

are fashion conscious, you will enjoy shopping in Quiapo (see related article). There are thrift finds and imported goods, junk that you can turn into treasure by mixing and matching, and gorgeous, gorgeous finds if you know how and where to look. One of the best things about Quiapo? You can always haggle your way to the price you want.

are sporty and athletic, there are a lot of sports stores along Evangelista street that sell everything from punching bags and balls of all kinds to medals and trophies.

are a musician, you can find musical instruments at low prices on Evangelista St., too. (In fact, a lot of shops double as music and sports stores.) My brother was able to buy his bongos from one of the stores without spending too much.

are a techie geek, there are shops selling gadgets and computer accessories for next to nothing. You have to know your stuff, though, lest you are duped into buying something that doesn't work. You can also buy blank CDs at low prices for all your burning needs.

are a food lover, Quiapo is home to all kinds of adventures for your palate. (See related article.)

are adventurous, danger seems always imminent in Quiapo, if you allow yourself to feel it. Remember that like any other place in the world, Quiapo can be as boring or as exciting as you make it.

are an artist, Quiapo may just provide the inspiration you are looking for. It will feed your senses to overflowing. There is always something to see, always something to experience in Quiapo, as long as you keep your eyes open.

Quenching a fashionista's thirst in Quiapo

Text by Jason Doplito

WHO goes to Quiapo for the malls? Apparently, a good number of Filipinos. But despite the presence of shopping mall conglomerate ShoeMart in this district, more opt for the open-air bangketa and tiangge stalls. No wonder people are spilling all over the streets here. If you think that only a beleaguered teenage would-be mother can enjoy the goods of Quiapo, you might be in for a teeny shock. You can actually satisfy your fashionista cravings in Quiapo, and skip overcrowded Divisoria in the process.

First, dismiss any silly rumors about the presence of SARS in ukay-ukays. The bacteria couldn't have possibly survived the long trip from China to our country, and the heavy traffic from the pier to Quiapo. Having done that, head on to Ramon Hidalgo Street, which is to the left of the Nazarene Church, and scour the long line of clothes being sold for only P35. Anything greater than that will qualify under "expensive."

Initially, you'll probably not even touch the clothes because the act lacks glamour, but there really are some good finds. You have to carefully inspect the clothes though, because they are, after all, used items. There might be holes in them that you cannot fix anymore. Here you can also buy funky socks in crazy and colorful themes priced at P35.

Brand-new items

The other side, Carriedo Street, offers brand-new clothing with more options for men, too. They have black shirts with drawings of the more popular rock bands and hip-hop artists, but they come in extra-large sizes so it might be better to leave them to the followers of the grunge look. What are nicer though are the underwear, also along the same area. Although you're better off wearing them only if you are sure no one sees them for they loudly scream "fake" once the garter shows off the Polo, Calvin Klein and Bench labels. Ladies will also have a grand time shopping for lingerie with cute cartoon prints. All items are not more than P100.

to Platerias Street and start your back-to-school shopping. A wide array of backpacks under the popular brands of Jansport, Adidas and Puma make good "American Idols" of the originals. Aside from school bags, they also have traveling and mountaineering bags, which go from large to extra large. Before you buy them, try to stretch the bags' stitching to make sure they are not easily ripped apart. Then pray they really do not rip apart once you put your things in them.

Fine accessories

Go back to Carnado Street and walk towards the Nazarene Church. At the end of the said street, you'll find Lotta Marketing Corporation, a shop that probably sells the best ladies' accessories in the whole of Quapo. It's an air-conditioned shop but that shouldn't intimidate you as the prices are still Quapo-friendly. With most of the jewelry imported from Korea, the shop is also perhaps the trendiest. Here you'll find necklaces (P120), bracelets (P80), earrings (P40-P120) and beads to gratify the fashion accessory monster in you. From simple pearls to flashy accessories, they are sure to match your taste.

Along the sidewalk of this street, or bangketa, are even more affordable accessories. You'll have to look down to find a little boy and a woman selling dainty bracelets and rings that won't be loud enough for little girls. They were right in front of the Plaza Miranda Mall two weeks ago. And speaking of malis, there are a couple of other department stores that you can go to for more low-priced shopping. The Manila City Plaza has a gigantic collection of mobile accessories, from cases to pendants to personalize your cell phones. At the Plaza Miranda Mall, you can find watches and shades (P10) to spruce up your ordinary get-up.

If you are looking for formal Filipino wear, La Manilaña (Palanca Street) and Manning's Lace Corporation (Evangelista Street) are dealers of all kinds of barong, wedding gowns, baptismal dresses and other native products. But if you want more Filipino souvenir items, walk north from the front of the Nazarene Church, where the Quiapo Bridge is, and under that you'll find more of them.

"TRY ME." If the slippers fit, they're yours for P35.

jewelry for every

Now it'll be crazy to enumerate the other finds that we discovered in Quapo. You have to find out for yourself where the buzz is because that's half the fun. The other half is discovering you can get stuff for much less than what you'll pay in upscale department stores.

THE POST-HOLY Week scene has sun drenched bodies yearning for a longer break—the "I-need-a-vacation-from-my-vacation" mode—and reminiscing the beach-bum lifestyle of the week gone by. Thankfully, I missed my early morning flight to the beach and chose to stay and hug my much missed companion—my bed.

Though the Holy Midweek gave me the beach itch, I just jazzed up my summer collection and got ready for Manolo Dario's Easter eve party at Temple—which was packed with mucho, mucho party-philies who decided that Manila was the best spot to chill this season.

Talking about Temple, this latest reason to go east this side of Greenbelt had a sassy, saucy opening party just about a week ago.

Uptown and downtown chic mixed and marched in Oriental orgasmic attires that spelled Asia with a capital A.

Tim Yap

There were patchwork overload, sari seduction, lumino clusters and dragon dynasties all aflame.

I want to crown my favorite stylist Jenni Epperson with a "Miss Chinatown" title for her of fortress Chinese-street-chic-meets-Japanimation-robe style lux; Miguel Rosales, who brilliantly paired a Thailand souvenir shirt with a black Yohji jacket; and Audrey Tan, in a red cheongsam that spelled dragon lady—to birthday boy Miguel Zubiri.

There were more fun, funky and frivolous flavors as partyphiles worshipped at the latest hip bar-reso in town.

Every night was filled with Buddha-dhicious delights—from model-watching to party-grooving. Everything was just a prayer away.

Behind Temple's temptation is 23-year-old Erik Cua—nightlife's newest wunderkind. You must also know that he is the brains and muscle behind Eastwood City successes Jack's Loft (still the best cheesecake in town) and The Basement. Make way for Erik, dudes.

That night also coincided with PMAP prexy Rissa Samson's natal day (shared with twin Robby Mananquil). DJs Elaine Habayeb, Martin Pulgar and Kevin Ruiz (who can make me dance even in my sleep) pumped the music up, up and away, as the giant Buddha loomed over the partyphiles' heads, as if to watch over the random revelry.

Long lines formed to the bathroom, and even longer lines to the bar, as booze flowed freely, freely.

Guests were gifted with candy tabs in the form of cigarettes reminiscent of Shanghai 20's and golden bouillons for prosperity.

K-Swiss hip-hopping

Friday's main event is the launch of K Swiss's "Got Love" hip hop tour.

Yup, you heard it right—K Swiss, that trusted shoe brand from our '80s childhood, is back with a hip-per-than-hop, sole-ful renaissance.

The party kicks off at Culture Club with hot, hot, hot acts 7 shots, SVC, Paul "PKSO" Sirate, DJ Phatbone and DJ Kristyles, MC Nathan J. and Bartle Crew Breakdancers.

If you wear your K Swiss (anywhere from head to foot, yall), you get special prizes on the street dancing spot.

Skin-care solutions

WEEK after week, I find my inbox flooded with inquiries on the best products for the skin. With tubes and tubes of cleansers and moisturizers lining store shelves, it is quite a challenge to find the products that will, once and for all, agree with your skin and not make it look like a chemical explosion site. The right skin-care regimen, has, apparently, become the Holy Grail of beauty.

While these requests add a load to my beauty research, I am glad to hear that more and more women (and men!) are becoming more and more discriminating in terms of choosing the stuff that touches their skin. That old bar of soap just won't do anymore! Believing that proper skin care is one of the best beauty investments is probably the single piece of knowledge that can make a difference with the way you look, take care of yourself, and yes, even how you spend your money on products.

Tempting as it may be to stock up on the most luxurious and expensive brands available today, the first thing to remember is that the price tag on a product is not necessarily proportional to the results it will deliver. Also, stocking up after reading on the products Donita Rose has on her dresser also won't guarantee the number of endorsements she has, much less her complexion. When picking out the best of the lot, consulting a perky sales rep or the latest slew of recommendations in a glossy magazine only comes next to consulting your own skin.

Understanding the way your skin reacts to products and other factors is the first step to achieving the healthiest complexion. No two skin types are alike, which explains how that moisturizer keeps your sister's skin aglow while it makes you break out. Knowing your skin type and its needs is something that takes thoughtful consideration and a lot of time. Lucky for you I'll be making it easier. Wash off all the gunk you have on, take out a mirror and be honest.

Dry skin

The lowdown:

- Your skin has a matte finish even without powder, no gleaming spots whatsoever.
- Friends tell you you're lucky not to have caverns for pores.
- You find yourself complaining about premature aging, finding a few "wrinkles" here and there, fine lines on parts of the face.
- You are sometimes plagued with red patches and rough, flaking skin.

What you worry about:

- Visible signs of aging (lines and wrinkles) developing earlier.
- Your skin going berserk with climate changes (especially in cooler weather), feeling tight and even peeling.
- Greater susceptibility to allergies.

What you need:

- Mild, non-drying, non-irritating products with as few ingredients as possible (to avoid puffy faces and other allergic reactions).
- Moisture, moisture, moisture! And I don't mean grease, okay?
- A mild treatment for your occasional battles with acne. Think tea tree oil.

Oily skin

The lowdown:

- Your vain friends check their reflections on the glistening surface that is your forehead.
- Your pores mimic the craters on the moon.
- You have a stash of benzoyl peroxide, salicylic acid, and tea tree oil for your too-often zit attacks.

What you worry about:

- Pimples, blackheads, whiteheads that appear on the worst places, at the wrong time.
- The time oil blotting sheets will be phased out. How can you live with a greaseball for a face?

What you need:

- Non-comedogenicity. In other words, products that won't get too friendly and stay too long in your pores.
- Light formulas that will allow your skin to breathe and won't be a chore to wash off.
- A moisturizer, believe it or not! The key words: oil-free.

Combination skin

The lowdown:

- You're shiny in some places—your nose and forehead. This gets worse during the hot and humid summer months.

- You wish you can transfer all the excess "moisture" on your T-zone to your dry cheeks.
- You get breakouts sometimes, allergies on occasion.

What you worry about:

- Once-in-a-while (but once too many) pimple breakouts and clogged pores on your nose.
- Shiny portions of your face in the summer.

- Dry as the Sahara complexion around Christmas.

What you need:

- Balance. Your products should target dry areas with moisture and oil-control for excess grease.

Now that you've categorized your skin type and discovered exactly what it needs to maintain its health, you need a reliable line to help. The VMV Hypoallergenic line has been in the business of taking care of all skin types even before the boom of beauty products, and is continuing to make satisfied, loyal users of their customers until this very day. Their secret is the simplicity of the products they offer—free of the "frilly" and complicated regimens some labels recommend. They are firm believers of cleansing, toning and moisturizing, but have added an extra step to this regimen: protecting. True advocates of the anti-sun damage school of beauty, they also specialize in intensive sun protection, a must for optimum skin condition.

After categorizing your skin type, the next logical step is to use the products formulated especially for your skin condition. Borne of in-depth research and testing, the skin-care lines of VMV Hypoallergenic were instant hits for many problematic, skin-conscious people. The simple, color-coded system makes this even Milk White for dry skin. Cleanse with the Super Cream Cleanser everyday, and exfoliate with the Super Skin Cleanser with Pumice twice a week. Follow up with Superskin 1 to deep cleanse and tone. Nourish dry skin with Superskin Supermois-

Spring Green for oily skin. Wash away dirt and grime with the Super Cream Cleanser for Oily Skin, slough off dead skin cells with Super Cream Cleanser with pumice, or treat with Super Cream Cleanser with Zinc PCA and pumice. Use Superskin 3 to refresh, and Superskin Pore Minimiser to tighten enlarged pores. Hydrate with Oil-Free Superskin Moisturizer with SPF 15. Don't skip the sunscreen.

Summer Peach for combination skin. Use Super Cream Cleanser for combination skin day and night, alternate with Superskin Cleanser with Pumice at least twice a week. Apply Superskin 2, a fresh toner, with cotton ball after cleansing. Superskin Moisturizer SPF 15 is my favorite for a supple, fresh complexion, and I follow up with Armada Face Cover SPF 45 to avoid sun damage.

VMV Hypoallergenic has expanded its skin care line with a Spa/Clinic for intensive beauty treatments to improve skin condition even more. Visit Original Skin by VMV at King's Court, Pasong Tamo, Makati, or call 889-6137 to 39.

2BU! THERMOMETER

THE SPIRITUALITY Quiapo church plays a very big role in the lives of both locals and visitors. There's beauty in the serenity one finds within the confines of the church, especially in stark contrast with the constant chaos of its surroundings.

COOL COOL QUIAPO. Finally the underpass has air-conditioning. It's a major relief from the unbearable summer heat.

MELTING POT We saw two Moslem women in complete garb, buying chicken from KFC. Quiapo is where people from all cultures, standpoints and lifestyles meet. Everything is real and at the same time dream-like.

PEOPLE WHO SPIT ON THE STREETS Number one, it's unhygienic. Number two, it's disgusting. Nah, we don't need a number three.

QUIAPO HOSPITALITY Contrary to what a lot of people think, some Quiapo locals are actually friendly. They strike up conversations and give directions with enough warmth that can't be expected from strangers.

PRICES. Quiapo redefines the word "next-pensive." And if whatever it is that you wish to buy is not cheap enough, you can always whip out your bargaining skills until the prices are low enough for your budget.

UNABASHED AWE Strangers gaped at our photographer's cameras they read our IDs out loud and asked questions about the paper. Their curiosity and interest were so real, so honest, so un-ke the jaded front put up by most people we meet every day.

THE PUSHING AND SHOVING. Pedicab drivers hover at you to get out of the way. Shoppers push you. Courtless bows hostile you. When vendors talk to you, they get really close. Apparently, respect for one's personal space is absent in this district.

WHAT is the government doing for Quiapo? No, really.

THE CRIME RATE. We've heard countless stories of people losing their phones, bags, themselves in Quiapo. We're only grateful it didn't happen to us.

Girl gets tired of initiating dates with boyfriend

DEAR Sep and Mark,

There is a guy I've been seeing (and I think I'm in love with him) for almost a year now, and he seems to be the ideal man I've been looking for. He's cute, fun, has a good job, and best of all, he makes me feel good. That sounds perfect, right? But the problem is that we rarely see each other. Since we both have jobs, we are too busy to hang out and date regularly.

Another problem is that lately, I've been feeling as if I'm always the one who has to call him up just so we can schedule a date or a little trip. It's as if I'm the one taking charge of things. I'm older than him, and being the one who always does the initiating makes me feel older than I really am.

Sometimes, I don't contact him for a while just so he can have the opportunity to call me up and invite me to go out. But that only results in not hearing from him for weeks, and the longest that I've waited was about a month and a half.

My friends have asked me if he really is worth putting up with all that trouble, and I tell them that he's the only guy whom I can have so much fun with. Only, that doesn't happen as often as I'd like. So that is what we have to work on in our relationship. What do you guys think?

MS DAZED AND CONFUSED

Sure, he seems to have the qualities that you've been looking for in a man. Sure, he is the best date you've ever had. But if you measured the time that you spent sitting on your hands and waiting in vain for him to call you, you'd find out that you could have had enough time and opportunities to meet 10 other guys who could prove to be good dates as well, or even good boyfriends.

Any self-respecting person can see that all the good things you like about your guy is outweighed by the hellish uncertainty he gives you in your non-progressing relationship. And, come to think of it, if he likes you and knows how to make you feel good, then he should know better than ignoring you for weeks after one good date.

My advice is don't take him too seriously because he certainly does that to you. Maintain the power balance by treating him as flippantly as he treats you and be open to meeting other better fish. I'm sure they're out there.

SEP

Dear Miss Dazed and Confused, who's probably desperate and masochistic too, you have to be reminded that blaming one's job for the absence of color in your love life is pointless. You surely can't sue your employer or expect you and your bhabes to drop your day jobs like a hot potato, just to have more time for fries or caviar. Out there in the jungle, Jacks and Jills juggle career and love (and more) and they're not even Wonder Woman or Krusty the Clown to begin with. Looks like your man is no juggler, or maybe he has a knack for juggling other stuff (uhm, girl perhaps?).

Pat your back for actively pursuing your own happiness. Pat it dry, too, since your back is probably wet with all the initiating you've been forced to do. I know you're liked by now since every girl deserves to be pursued at least one thousand times, and the one you think you already love hasn't pursued you even once.

The responsible and active you may simply be attributed to the fact that you are older. Not a bad thing, actually. Your actions are understandable and commendable for a while, but do you want to be your boyfriend's mom, really?

You've thrown one and a half months into the trash bin. Don't waste another day. Just think of the many dishes and Dicks (or Toms and Harries) you can sample instead of yawning and obsessive-compulsively glancing at your watch.

Fun isn't the only criterion you should base a relationship on. If that's the only reason why you're holding on to your bhabes, look around and realize that there are many Georges in the jungle who can give you more fun—if that's what you're really looking for in a relationship.

Sure, your boyfriend makes you feel good about yourself—every time you're together, which is like once a month, I suppose, but why not feel glorious 29 days a month as opposed to feeling good only once a month?

Try to let go of your pet and get back into the groove of the jungle. MARK

Quiapo's outlandish

Gloria Arroyo and the Queen of Millennium Prophets

Text by Tim Yap

"SA NGALAN ng Ama, ng Anak, at ng Espiritu Santo..." the priest's booming voice reverberates even outside the Quiapo church, where vendors of all colors, shapes and sizes huddle like sheep, very much like the prayerful people crowding God's temple on an Easter Sunday afternoon.

"Amen." As the guy in robes ends the Mass, all who are engaged in the commerce of Church Inc. respectfully make the sign of the cross. Never mind if the customer is about to pay for the corn that he has ordered, or the chicharon that is just being packed, or the "kwek-kwek" that has just been fried.

If Jesus would suddenly come upon the scene, he would think twice before driving the merchants away from the temple.

"Pug ina m# pare!" A guy kisses his buddy with a fist and runs away.

Around Plaza Miranda, a thousand and one scenes unfold—from vendors feverishly selling their wares to children slugging it out for the last 25-centavo coin of an aims giver, lovers finding a moment to sit on a chain, and businessmen in motorbikes shuffling to and fro the marketplace.

In other parts of the world, this would be the height of underground edge—with skateboarders happily gliding around, kids in shabby chic and nomads in whatchamacallit fashion happily coming and going aimlessly.

But to us, it is just Quiapo, ubiquitous as the jeepney route and despised as Divisoria in terms of chaos, pollution and traffic.

Millennium fortune

On the opposite side of God's temple is a stretch of women, with chairs lined in front of them. If I hadn't known what they did, I would think that these women were out to give mass pedicure services to tired churchgoers.

"For P100, your millennium fortune will be told," says a woman in rose-colored shades, a pearly pink bonnet encrusted with diamonds that can compete with the costumes for rent at Camp Suki, and a shiny purple shawl to match.

With her colorful frump, she stands out from the battalion of fortune tellers. Of course, I choose her.

As our photographer Mike Alquinto explains to the woman why he needs to shoot her, another la femme bohemie interrupts him and urges him to speak in English. "Inglisin mo, magaling yan sa Inglisin!" she says.

In the Quiapo of contrasts, she who speaks the best English is queen.

"I am the only one with a certificate from Cardinal Sin and Santo Papa to operate here," I look into her eyes as she rattles off her credentials and she shows me a bunch of cheap laminated computer printouts that dangle around her neck like treasured pieces from the family chest.

The true president

On her lap lies a cardboard filled with tape, with random words inscribed on it—"Queen of Prophets," "Millennium kingdom" and other big words that sound mystical.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): Your idealism is aroused now, and you want to be part of something bigger than yourself. You want to make the world a better place.

 LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): You are about to enter an extremely powerful time. This year you will discover what is working in your life and what is not. Much success will be yours.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Do everything that you can to get better organized now. You want to feel on top of your scene. You want to be able to put your hand out and touch whatever you are looking for.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18): Now that your job has improved, you can expect to work very hard in the next few years. Do this because you will step out on stage—like a debut—in 2005.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20): Many of you enter a period of increased responsibilities with regard to children. Privately, some of you are asking, "What do I really want to be when I grow up?"

Gloria Arroyo and the Queen of Millennium Prophets

Until I see the name "Gloria Arroyo," "Why is Gloria Arroyo here in your board?" I cautiously ask her.

"Because she is the false president," she replies. "I am the true president according to the Millennium prophet, for I am the queen of the millennium prophets. Gloria is just the officer in charge, I am the real one."

I suppress a laugh and urge her to go on. "Erap is my uncle," she continues. "You see, my mom is his sister."

I forget to ask her why she is in Quiapo and not in Malsacang, where a president should rightfully hold office.

In the middle of the card shuffling, I am distracted by another sight—of an innocent-looking young girl listening intently to Madam Miss Fortune Number 2. "Iha, mayaman ang inapapangasawa mo..." And her face brightens up.

A kid selling scapulars approaches me and begs me to buy the religious items for P10 a pop. He disappears after some territorial bully boy kicks him in the butt and challenges him to a fight.

Behind them, a middle-aged woman hits an old man with an empty plastic bottle. "Itay, ano ba, ang kulit nyo—sabi nga 'wag kayong pakalat-kalat eh!"

Tarot and feng shui

Sensing my short attention span, Miss Fortune Teller One, the Queen of the Prophets, makes her voice louder. "You have to buy pung-suy (I think she meant feng shui) from us—you can put it anywhere—your house, your room, your office..."

Uh, I think I have bought enough of those from (the late) Paul Lau—I don't need more.

She then proceeds to read her cards, literally. Every tarot would have a note, with handwritten English inscriptions "love, good

TRUE OR FALSE PROPHETS? The author amidst the frenzy of fate and faith in the streets of Quiapo

Not even a Jeanne Dixon can foretell the wild predictions of Quiapo's self-proclaimed Nostradamuses—much less the fees they will charge health, happiness" and other feel-good words meant for the lost and the lovelorn.

"Three women are in love with you," she tells me. "You'll have five kids." She flips the cards as she squeezes my palms, as if she were a shiatsu masseuse on a bad day.

She then takes out yet another photocopied paper and checks my horoscope, reads it aloud like an honor student in a final oral test.

"You are Capricorn, right? You are capricious, hard-working, intelligent, blah blah blah."

I get tired of the big words, so politely, I say, "Okay, no more questions."

"Okay, P300." She stares at me bluntly.

"Huh? Why the price increase?" I feel like a foreigner who just got duped by the friendly neighborhood prostitute.

"Because your photographer took my picture!" She proudly snaps back, giving Norma Desmond a run for her fortune money.

Relieved about the end of the inflated session, I head toward the church and make the sign of the cross as I observe life in Quiapo pass by, where the certainty ratio is as hula as hula gets.
